Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bill there has been an absolute agreement on the part of the minority and the majority of the subcommittee. There is nothing in here that I intend to offer an amendment to. The bill has been very carefully considered in the committee, it has been considered entirely on its merits and nothing has been put in here that I feel should be subject to criticism even in the slightest degree. I hope that when the bill is read the membership of the House will stand against the addition of any unnecessary sums to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask one question, not for the purpose of getting involved in taxation. The committee recommends $6,150,000 to further implement the Internal Revenue Bureau in the way of putting on additional help and personnel in handling the returns necessary under the Victory tax and for the thirty-five to forty million additional new taxpayers that came in as a result of the 1942 Revenue Act, and who will file returns. It seems to me this is a sensible question. If the law is repealed that assessed those taxes for which the additional personnel is now called for and no additional law enacted bringing in a similar number, the $6,150,000 would not be expended, would it?

Mr. TABER. Well, I presume that is true, but it is an assumption that I would not expect to result.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Neither do I expect it to result, but I bring up that question to show that when you bring thirty-five or forty million additional taxpayers into the family to contribute directly to the tax box there are involved from seventy to eighty million additional tax calculations that have to be made and audited by somebody.

Mr. TABER. That is correct. The $6,000,000 that has been added to the bill is a small fraction of what would be required upon an annual basis for this operation. There will be very little of this $6,000,000 spent before the first of April, and it will not implement their force to any great extent until close to the 1st of July.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. It is absolutely necessary to have the force in the Bureau of Internal Revenue if we are going to collect the revenue.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think so too.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, today I introduced a bill to place second-, third-, and fourth-class mail on a paying basis. For a number of years the Government has been giving a subsidy to the users of second-, third-, and fourth-class mail which is costing the taxpayers of this country close to $130,000,000 per annum.

The following tables will show the losses for the past 5 years:

|---|---|
| 1938: | |
| Second-class mail | $89,608,278.20 |
| Third-class mail | 23,352,987.75 |
| Fourth-class mail | 16,969,837.46 |
| Total | 129,931,103.41 |
| 1939: | |
| Second-class mail | 87,264,126.47 |
| Third-class mail | 23,682,071.15 |
| Fourth-class mail | 17,488,641.33 |
| Total | 128,634,838.95 |
| 1940: | |
| Second-class mail | 85,381,026.63 |
| Third-class mail | 26,291,985.68 |
| Fourth-class mail | 21,809,869.92 |
| Total | 133,482,832.23 |
| 1941: | |
| Second-class mail | 83,519,746.30 |
| Third-class mail | 22,325,181.15 |
| Fourth-class mail | 19,092,069.41 |
| Total | 124,936,996.86 |
| 1942: | |
| Second-class mail | 86,345,597.65 |
| Third-class mail | 23,954,159.98 |
| Fourth-class mail | 17,909,587.20 |
| Total | 128,209,344.83 |

The total loss for the past 5 years amounts to $645,195,166.28. This is over a half-a-billion-dollar subsidy given by the Government during the 5 years mentioned above.

There have been rumors around Capitol Hill that the postal authorities are going to recommend an increase in the postage on first-class mail. That is something which is hard to understand, because first-class mail is used by nearly every family in the United States. It does not seem possible that they would increase the postage on this mail where men making $20 to $30 per week would be affected and at the same time give a subsidy to a small minority group using the second-, third-, and fourth-class mail.

In 1938 the net income from first-class mail was $123,535,504.94, in 1939 the net income was $128,291,223.29, in 1940 it was $136,680,313.10, and in 1941 it was $146,815,578.73. In 1942 the net income was $162,976,883.65.

I feel that the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle who are today making speeches on economy and advocating the cutting down of appropriations for all departments except those engaged in war activities should support my bill. It will save the taxpayers of this country millions and millions of dollars. Part of this saving could be used to increase the pay of postal employees, who have not received an increase in salary for many years; the balance could go into the Treasury of the United States.

To continue the practice of permitting second-, third-, and fourth-class mail to go through the post office at a loss is something I cannot understand. Of course, I am not advocating that a profit be made, but at least the users should pay for the cost of handling second,-third-, and fourth-class mail.

You will note in the Postmaster's annual report that the newspapers, magazines, and different publications receive an annual subsidy from between eighty-five to ninety million dollars. In other words the taxpayers of this country are making a contribution to the very papers that are advocating economy throughout the various departments, but they do not complain about the subsidy they are receiving, which in the past 5 years amounted to close to a half billion dollars.

Very often the newspapers refer to the franking privileges accorded to Members of Congress. Yet if you will take the amount it costs the Government for the congressional franking privilege, you will see that it is about one-half of 1 percent of the total amount lost on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail.

I, therefore, appeal to the Members of Congress to ask the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report this bill out favorably, because if it is enacted into law, it will save the taxpayers, not only millions, but billions of dollars that are now going to the owners of the newspapers, magazines, and other publications throughout the country.

I assure you I will do everything in my power to get favorable action on this legislation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have noticed within the past 6 months that several magazines with Nation-wide circulation have doubled their subscription rates, from 5 to 10 cents, and that a good many others have increased their rates to protect themselves and get the benefit of the inflation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein the bill to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, the bill which I have introduced today is as follows:

A bill to provide for increasing postal rates on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail matter so that such rates will yield revenues adequate to cover expenditures

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this act, regulations providing for such increases in the rates of postage applicable to mail matter of the second, third, and fourth classes as may be necessary in order that the revenues in the case of such several classes of mail matter will fairly approximate the costs and expenditures attributable thereto, and to amend such regulations, from time to time, to the extent necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The rates of postage provided for in such regulations shall become effective, in lieu of the rates now provided by law, within such reasonable time after the promulgation of such regulations as the Postmaster General may provide therein. The regulations prescribed pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be published in the Federal Register.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. If I heard the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee correctly, I am amazed that he should indicate in his remarks that there has been any lack of support insofar as the minority is concerned in building up our great ship-construction program which is so vital in the war effort.

My mind goes back less than 3 years to a day in June when this House was informed, 10 months after the war had started, that the Chief Executive of this country had indicated that unless Members of Congress desired to stay here and make speeches they could go home, that there was nothing else for them to do. We all recall, of course, that Congress did not go home. The Congress remained in Washington and as a result the war effort got under way at increased speed shortly thereafter. I think, generally speaking, that every ship-construction bill that has come along has had the overwhelming support of Members on both sides of this aisle.

Only 2 days ago a ship-facility bill was before the House, and on a roll call there was a unanimous vote in favor of the passage of the legislation.

This bill is the first deficiency bill. As in the case of other deficiency bills, the hearings reflect certain tendencies on the part of the executive agencies. They reflect a tendency to override the work of the regular subcommittees. They reflect a tendency to build up in the remaining portion of the fiscal year an organization to be carried on in the next fiscal year. They reflect a tendency to come in before the Deficiency Subcommittee with a lot of personnel that was never authorized by the regular subcommittee, placing the Deficiency Subcommittee in the position of either approving the increase or compelling a lot of personnel to be severed from the rolls of the Agency.

I think this particular bill has dealt with these tendencies in pretty satisfactory shape.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There are more than 100 Republicans on the floor and only 15 Democrats. This being a move toward economy, does not the gentleman believe we ought to have more Members here?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I believe we ought to have a large representation here on any bill that carries in the neighborhood of $6,000,000,000, as this one does.

As I say, I think this bill deals with the tendencies to which I have referred in a pretty satisfactory manner, but they must be watched and guarded against, in every deficiency bill.

It may be that the Congress should take drastic action, such, for instance, as limiting specifically by the terms of the bill the number of departmental personnel and the number of field personnal that may be carried on the rolls of this or that agency. It is a perfectly ridiculous spectacle, to my mind, to see 100,000 additional Federal personnel going on the Federal rolls every month, with the Committee on Appropriations often confronted by the fact that personnel has been added before the committee has passed upon the merits of the addition. This is a matter that should be given further and careful consideration.

This bill carries a total in contract authorizations of $5,250,000,000, reduced to a net obligation of about $2,174,000,000 by reason of the fact that about three-quarters of the actual appropriation for the Maritime Commission in the bill is to be applied against this contract authorization.

The bill also carries appropriations aggregating about $4,125,000,000, or an aggregate in the net as indicated in the report of about $6,299,000,000.

The principal item, of course, is for the Maritime Commission, which takes all the contract authorization to which I have just referred and $4,000,000,000 out of the $4,125,000,000 of appropriations.

Outside of the Maritime Commission, there is only about $125,000,000 of appropriations, which reflects a decrease of $13,900,000, or 10 percent, as compared with the Budget estimates.

The principal items outside of the Maritime Commission are $40,000,000 for the Public Roads Administration for access roads; $10,000,000 for the Office of Education for training programs; $31,-000,000 for the Treasury Department, largely for expenses of loans and the Bureau of Internal Revenue; $7,500,000 for the Department of Justice, largely for the Immigration and Naturalization Service; $6,800,000 for judgments and claims; $5,500,000 for the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics; $4,700,000 for the Department of Agriculture largely for forest fires and insect control; and $3,250,000 for the War Labor Board, with particular reference to wage stabilization.

Certain important requests have been omitted, at least for the time being, including that for a farm labor program, $65,000,000; that of the National Resources Planning Board, $200,000; that of the Office of Education, $3,068,000; that of the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Service, $2,884,000; that of the Children's Bureau, $1,200,000; and that of the United States Employment Service, $2,454,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The amount stated for the Children's Bureau is quite a cut from the amount asked.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The item requested by the Children's Bureau has been deferred at least for the time being. It amounted to $1,200,000 for the balance of the fiscal year or $4,800,000 on an annual basis.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If a little more information could be secured and an amendment worked out, would that be considered?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the committee felt that this is a matter in which the States and localities should be primarily responsible, and that further study is essential before approving the program submitted.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I believe the Committee would feel, would it not, that it is very essential at this time that we should keep up the health of the children. I think it is the least that we can do for those who serve in the armed service.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The program proposed had to do with the taking care of mothers at the time of childbirth.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That has to do with the life of the child.

Mr. JENSEN. In respect to the appropriation for the Justice Department, is that made necessary because of the increase of the F. B. I. force?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The increase for the Justice Department is very largely for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. There is nothing here I think for the F. B. I., as such.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Supplementing what the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] has spoken about, with respect to the requested additional appropriation of $1,200,000 in a supplemental estimate for the Children's Bureau, that provides grants to the States in providing medical nursing, hospital, and maternal care for the lives of children of enlisted men in the armed forces. As I understand the gentleman, and I have read the statement on this subject in the report, it is the attitude of the deficiency committee that this item was passed over or eliminated from the estimates because it was thought that the States themselves are in a financial condition to stand this additional expenditure, rather than for the Federal Government to pay it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman that if he will consult the table appearing in the RECORD he will see that a number of States are in fact taking care of these things 100 percent, and are therefore making no request for this purpose. The committee felt, I think I am correct in saying, that before embarking on a $4,800,000 annual program, which has no enabling legislation to support it, further study should be given the question.

Mr. KEEFE. But it is merely supplemental to the program now being carried out.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. There is a program that applies to prenatal care and to postnatal care also, but it does not apply, as I understand it, to the particular matter contemplated here, namely, expenses at the time of childbirth.

Mr. KEEFE. The hearings indicate that the Children's Bureau had in fact made allotments out of appropriated funds, in this fiscal year, to inaugurate this program in some 27 States that had approved programs. As I understand it, the deficiency item was to enable the carrying on of that program that had already been inaugurated, and it was in operation in some 27 States, that had programs already approved, and that there were some 17 other States that had programs subject to approval. Personally I am interested in seeing that that particular program is carried on, and unless there is some good reason that can be advanced other than the mere fact that the States themselves are in a financial condition to carry this program on, and I find according to the list I have before me that only 7 States have not requested funds for this purpose, including Alaska, I think I would be compelled to offer an amendment. It seems to me that this is a very vital question, and one that should be given the attention of the Congress. As I say, I personally would be inclined to offer an amendment to the bill in the absence of a very specific showing of a lack of necessity to restore this item, because I believe it is a very vital and necessary work that this Bureau is doing.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think I can say to the gentleman that all the members of the committee have sympathy with the objectives sought by several of the items eliminated, including the one in respect to which the gentleman has just expressed his own personal interest.

However, as I have already stated, I think it was felt that these programs should have further study, involving as they do the question of the division between Federal activity on the one hand and local activity on the other; involving as they do the fact that no one of them has been supported by enabling legislation; involving further as they do the fact that each of them calls for a very substantial outlay if estimated on an annual basis.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] was talking about a program for mothers whose husbands were in the service; maternity care.

Mr. KEEFE. That is right.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I was interested in the program which apparently has been started, to take care of mothers who are employed in war industries, which is also in this bill or was presented by the Budget in this bill, I believe?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It was.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The same action was taken on that. It was deferred?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It was.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The next question as I read this—I cannot tell—have they already started these nurseries for taking care of these children of employed mothers?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. There has been a certain amount of work done under W. P. A. There is also being carried on a certain amount under the Lanham Act funds, the funds being used, as I understand it, in those communities where there has been a great increase of workers from outside communities so that local communities are not in a position to take care of them, and as a matter of experience, resulting in actual payment for that care largely, if not wholly, by the mothers whose children are taken care of.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The next question arises, if you cut this off right here, does that not mean that some women will have to leave defense industries who are now working in essential industries?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. This is a proposal to take over the work by the Office of Defense Housing and Welfare Service, and to administer it through grants to States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

A large share of the expenditure will be borne by Uncle Sam instead of locally—the proposal calls for about $30,000,000 on an annual basis.

The committee, as I said in the other instance, felt that before embarking on a quasi permanent program calling for a large expenditure of funds, and in direct conflict with work now being carried on under Lanham Act funds, further study should be given the matter.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does it not seem proper that you should help those communities where there is a tremendous influx of workers? As the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER] said, I do not see how those women can carry on their work if the children are not cared for. It seems to me it should be done at once and then change it over to another department later if advisable.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think everybody in the committee and everybody in the House is fundamentally in sympathy with the objectives sought. The question is one of ways and means and not of objectives.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mrs. BOLTON. Is the Lanham Act fund for emergencies only in those fields?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. As I understand it the Lanham Act activities are confined to those communities, where there has been a great influx of workers from outside, on the theory that the influx has led to a situation that the locality might properly not be asked to take care of.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield briefly. There are many matters I wish to cover.

Mr. KEEFE. Did the committee go into the activities of Mrs. Kerr in connection with this program in the use and handling of funds under the Lanham Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. We had a representative of that agency before the committee. Mrs. Kerr herself did not appear.

Mr. KEEFE. Was the committee motivated in its action in striking out the funds for the Children's Bureau by reason of the fact that Mrs. Kerr was alleged to be doing some activities along similar lines with funds provided under the Lanham Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. No. I think you are confusing the items. There are two items. One is for the Children's Bureau and deals with the care of mothers at the time of childbirth. The other is an item for the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Service, which proposes to carry on day care for children while the mothers are in employment. Mrs. Kerr comes in the latter picture.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman mentioned W. P. A. nursing projects. Of course, the gentleman is aware that those projects will be closed down by April 1?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. A large part of them will close on April 30, as I understand——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. So that all the more, that makes the need for increased appropriations?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is a factor in the picture.

MARITIME COMMISSION

Now, as has been stated, Mr. Chairman, the principal item in the bill is for the Maritime Commission.

Just to give an over-all picture, from July 1, 1940, to date, if this bill is passed, the Congress will have authorized about $11,226,000,000 for the construction of the so-called long-range program.

Appropriations aggregate $3,685,000 of which $2,091,000 are reported as unexpended. The independent offices bill just passed by the House carries further appropriations amounting to $1,289,000. In this bill there is a total of $4,000,000,000. This gives an over-all total of $7,300,000,000 for expenditure in the next 18 months.

Large as this seems, it appears to be justified by the fact that we have already reached a monthly expenditure of $400,000,000 and expect to go to $500,000,000 before the end of the calendar year. It also appears that the $4,000,000,000 under consideration before us now reflects a reduction of about $900,000,000 at the hands of the Budget.

The $4,000,000,000 now under consideration if allowed will be applied about one-quarter in respect to 2,242 ships under contract before October 31 last; and about three-quarters in respect to 2,161 ships to be placed under contract after that date. In other words, the long-range program contemplates 4,303 ships in addition to 843 ships in the other 3 programs of the agency, an over-all total of 5,146 ships.

The goal of 8,000,000 dead-weight tons in construction was reached in the calendar year 1942. It is hoped to go to 16,000,000 dead-weight tons in 1943 and to 18,800,000 dead-weight tons in 1944.

The importance of the work of the Commission cannot be exaggerated. It is apparent to us all.

There are a number of other items in the bill but I do not wish to take too much time.

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY—PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION

Public Roads Administration is asking for $40,000,000 for the construction of access roads. There has been a total authorization for access roads of $260,000,000 and appropriations to the amount of $74,600,000. You will find a summary of the projects by States on page 583 of the hearings. By June, 767 projects are reported for the Army, 349 for the Navy, and 226 for the War Production Board.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY—OFFICE OF EDUCATION

The Office of Education asks for $10,000,000 for additional payments through the States for vocational courses in less than college grades. Original estimates were based on 1,040,000 students for preemployment classes and 1,325,000 for supplemental instruction, a total of 2,365,000 students. Revised estimates call for 1,350,000 students for preemployment classes and 1,240,000 for supplementary instruction, a total of 2,590,000 students.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The N. A. C. A. asks for $5,494,000, for the most part to bring its staff up toward that which is authorized in the independent offices bill for 1944. The total provides also for some construction work at Langley Field and for the completion of the engine laboratory at Cleveland.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT—BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The Bureau of Internal Revenue, asks for $6,150,000 by reason of the new provisions of the tax law, particularly the Victory tax, for a large expansion of personnel and of field offices.

I call attention particularly to the proposed salary stabilization unit with about 300 people and 13 regional offices costing almost $700,000 annually. This unit had been set up by reason of the act of Congress of October 2, 1942, and the Executive order of the President of October 3, 1942, to deal with the matter of increases in salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Up to January 28, 1943, the Bureau had received 7,544 requests for its consideration—a statement covering this work will be found on page 473 of the hearings.

WAR LABOR BOARD

For the War Labor Board the committee recommends $3,250,000 bringing this agency on an annual basis up to $11,800,000 or thereabouts. It, too, contemplates a large increase in force, 2,280 to be exact with 12 regional offices, this again resulting from the act of Congress and the Executive order just referred to. While the Bureau of Internal Revenue has to pass upon salary increases, it is up to the War Labor Board to pass on wage increases.

The general policy of the Board is said to be to maintain the wage level of September 15, 1942, except where a change is necessary to correct so-called maladjustments, to eliminate substandards of living, to eliminate gross inequities, or to assure the effective prosecution of the war.

The agency has already had something over 20,000 applications for wage increases. They are coming in at the rate of about 8,000 cases a month. A statement as to its jurisdiction may be found at page 661 of the hearings.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

The matter of the increase for the Department of Justice $7,600,000 or thereabouts has already been referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN]. It is caused, in large measure, by the increase in work of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in dealing with the alien enemy detention program. The Service is charged with responsibility for the temporary detention of alien enemies, for the handling of any that may be placed on parole, and in large measure for those who may be interned.

There are half a dozen items that have been omitted, at least for the time being. I do not think further detail is necessary considering what has already been said. They include the farm labor program item calling for over $65,000,000 in the calendar year 1943; the National Resources Planning Board item of $200,000, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]; the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Service item of $2,884,000 for the balance of the fiscal year, and $30,000,000 on an annual basis; the Office of Education item of $3,068,000 for the balance of the fiscal year, and $8,500,000 on an annual basis, the Children's Bureau item of $1,200,000 for the fiscal year and $4,800,000 on an annual basis; and finally the United States Employment Service item of $2,540,000 which has already been turned down on two previous occasions by the subcommittee in charge of this agency.

I do not think I will take further time, Mr. Chairman, unless there are some questions. Other matters, I think, can be properly dealt with under the 5-minute rule.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House is a very important piece of legislation, but I hope to speak to you briefly about something which may be even more important than the pending legislation, and that is the synthetic rubber program of the Nation. It would be a waste of time to elaborate upon the importance of the rubber program because everybody knows it is of the utmost importance.

The War Production Board is bungling the rubber program. Instead of seeking to brush aside the obstacles in the way, it often appears that some of those in authority in the War Production Board are even seeking to throw obstacles in the way in order to prevent progress. I trust that this could not be so.

My portion of Texas, rather the district which I represent in Texas, not only produces considerable wheat, it is the greatest grain sorghum-producing area in America. We produce vast quantities of grain sorghum, many millions of bushels. We produce in Texas more than one-half of the grain sorghum which is produced in the Nation. As early as last March I called on the War Production Board to give consideration to the use of grain sorghum in the manufacture of grain alcohol, and on March 2, by letter, Mr. A. I. Henderson, Deputy Director of the Materials Division, assured me that consideration would be given to the use of surplus grain in Texas. Then at a later date, on September 22, Mr. Jeffers—and let me say that Mr. Jeffers, in my opinion, is doing the best he can to make a good Rubber Director—assured me that consideration would be given to the use of Texas grain in the production of grain alcohol.

At a later date Mr. John W. Boyer, Chief of the Alcohols and Solvents Section, Chemicals Division, War Production Board, led me to believe that some consideration was being given to grain sorghum in west Texas. I talked with him on January 5, 1943; then on January 28 I wrote him a letter stating in substance that west Texas was the greatest grain sorghum-producing area in the United States and asking for an investigation of the area. On February 6 in a letter of reply, Mr. Boyer stated that an engineer was then in Abilene, Tex., and that the area would be given full consideration during the next few days.

Mind you, Mr. Boyer did not say in his letter that grain sorghum would not be considered as a grain for the production of alcohol. No one else in the War Production Board had made any such statement, insofar as I know. I do not mean, however, that any promises were made to the people of Texas, or that great encouragement was given.

Then last week to my amazement another development came—a development which made me wonder about the forthrightness of some officials in the War Production Board.

I called Mr. Boyer to learn what progress was being made toward the use of grain sorghum in the alcohol program. Mr. Boyer stated that grain sorghum was not being given any consideration, and there was no thought in the War Production Board of giving any consideration to grain sorghum. He stated that the Department of Agriculture had charge of grains and starches and that the Department had selected wheat for the alcohol program and that grain sorghum was out of the picture. I promptly asked a member of the staff of Secretary Wickard for an explanation. Officials of the Department of Agriculture denied ever having made any such requirement, but did admit having written a letter to Mr. Donald Nelson which might have been misunderstood. The department wanted all surplus grains to have due consideration in the alcohol program. It seemed, therefore, that the War Production Board had willfully misled Texans into believing that grain sorghum was being considered, when actually the Board did not have the remotest idea of giving it a moment's consideration. I trust there was no real intent by the War Production Board to mislead anyone, at any rate, it was very unfortunate.

In order to inform and enlighten the War Production Board, the Department of Agriculture wrote a very significant letter yesterday, which I will insert later, and which certainly leaves the Board free to use wheat, corn, and grain sorghum in the grain-alcohol program. This is as it should be.

Let me quote the following from the letter:

> In view of these facts the Department recommends that consideration be given to the location of alcohol plants in the heaviest surplus grain-producing areas and to the utilization of various feed grains, such as corn in the Corn Belt, grain sorghums in the Southwest, and wheat in the Pacific Northwest.

Many months have passed since the War Production Board began to wrestle with the rubber program, and it is discouraging to learn that only yesterday did it learn that in making grain alcohol all types of grain could be considered.

I do not want to be unfair—I know that much grain alcohol has already been produced, that much progress has been made. I know that it is easy to criticize and hard to deliver the goods. But I think the American people have had a right to expect more goods than the War Production Board has delivered. This is war and "too little and too late" must give way to delivery on schedule.

Let me make it clear that if rubber can best be made by processes which do not require grain, then no grain should be used. The war effort comes first. There is no dispute on that point.

Texas is a great oil State, and we are glad to have our oil used in the rubber program. What we need is rubber, and plenty of it, and the material out of which it is made is of relatively no importance. However, experts have chosen both oil and grain.

Mr. WORLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WORLEY. I would like to commend the gentleman for presenting the case in such excellent fashion. I know he has spent several months, exactly as I have and several other Members from the southwest portions of the country, in trying to secure proper attention from the rubber production branch of the Government to our resources in Texas. There is one question I would like for the gentleman to explain. One reason that was advanced by Mr. Boyer and other gentlemen of the War Production Board, as to why we were not given consideration in the grain alcohol program, was that our proposed sites were not on navigable streams. Can the gentleman favor us with any information as to why that should be the case? We have down there plenty of raw materials to manufacture all the alcohol they will need in the synthetic rubber program.

Mr. MAHON. I may say to the gentleman that Mr. Boyer and others in this branch of the War Production Board seem to consider the Baruch report as a chart and guide. But my observation has been that when the report serves their purpose they use it. When necessary they seem to be able to interpret it rather liberally. The Baruch report did recommend that grain alcohol plants be put on navigable streams.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman is making a very important statement, and one with which I agree wholeheartedly. I notice, however, that the gentleman seems to be of the opinion that the Department of Agriculture coupled with the War Production Board has been somewhat derelict in view of negotiations the gentleman has carried on with them in waiting until perhaps yesterday to say that now grain sorghum may be considered in the alcohol program. But does not the gentleman believe that probably one reason for their dereliction is that the President vetoed the bill this Congress passed in which we tried to get synthetic rubber made from grain alcohol? Does the gentleman perhaps think that the Cabinet members were discouraged by the Chief's own action in vetoing that bill, and does he not believe that is probably one of the reasons for the delay that has come about?

Mr. MAHON. I may say to the gentleman that I voted for the bill to which he refers, but I do not believe the Department of Agriculture has had the responsibility of the rubber production program. I am blaming the War Production Board with short-sightedness and delay.

I am not saying that all alcohol should be made out of grain sorghums or out of wheat or out of corn. I say make it out of anything, and make rubber out of any available material. I say put the plants anywhere in any State of the Union that it is necessary and proper they should be put. Fair consideration and more action is what I am pleading for.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. It is very apparent that the gentleman has made quite an extensive study of this subject. Does the gentleman feel from his studies that the War Production Board is justified in demanding that these plants be built on navigable streams?

Mr. MAHON. I do not claim to be any expert on this subject. I will say that I believe that recommendations of the Baruch report should be given consideration just as all facts should be given consideration in any matter. I think the plants ought to be placed in the grain-producing areas and that the question of navigable streams should be wholly optional. I believe there are plenty of places in the United States where the plants might be properly located that are not on navigable streams.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. That is my opinion.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman.

Now, I should like to add for the record some general observations about grain sorghum. During the 1930's the average production for the entire United States was in excess of 52,000,000 bushels annually. The average Texas production was 27,000,000 bushels annually. The 1941 national production was about 111,700,000 bushels. The 1942 national production was about 107,000,000. In 1941 Texas produced 57,900,000 bushels and in 1942 Texas produced in excess of 59,000,000 bushels.

But the production of grain sorghum could be increased almost unbelievably. Large areas of Texas, especially west Texas, and parts of Oklahoma, and the Southwest generally, could increase grain sorghum production in 1943 by many millions of bushels with anything like fair weather conditions. Here is an almost unlimited source of grain for the production of alcohol and feed. The farmer can produce it if an adequate price is offered and if he is given a little encouragement by way of manpower and farm machinery. It is not an experimental crop.

Since it has been officially determined that the production of alcohol from grain is essential to the success of the rubber program, at least a minimum of one plant should be constructed for the use of each of the three principal grain sources—grain sorghum, wheat, and corn. As I understand it, a combination of these grains can be used in the same plant.

There has been for years a demand for the industrial use of surplus farm crops. Since such a program fits into the war effort, now is the time to begin that program. If the plants are placed in these grain areas referred to, then after the war, they will be near the sources of supply and can utilize surplus crops and help solve the problems of peacetime.

It may be to the selfish interest of some business enterprises to scrap these plants after the war. The War Production Board should have no part in furthering such a scheme.

I want to insert at this point the letter which was sent yesterday by Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Grover B. Hill, to Mr. Jeffers:

FEBRUARY 24, 1943.

Mr. W. M. JEFFERS,
Rubber Director,
New Municipal Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JEFFERS: This is to inform you concerning the availability of grain for use in the manufacture of alcohol, particularly in connection with the projected 100,000,000-gallon expansion in the alcohol production facilities.

The total supply of corn available at the beginning of the present marketing year starting October 1, 1942, was 3.7 billion bushels, the largest supply on record. In spite of the high level of utilization this year, it is estimated that there will be a carry-over of 500,000,000 bushels of corn on October 1, 1943. Approximately one-half of this carry-over will be located in the State of Iowa.

The current year's supplies of wheat are likewise the largest in the Nation's history and the carry-over at the end of the marketing year on July 1, 1943, will probably be 700,000,000 bushels or more than an average year's domestic requirements.

The Department's 1943 food-production program calls for increased production of corn, of wheat, of barley, and of grain sorghums.

In view of these facts, the Department recommends that consideration be given to the location of alcohol plants in the heaviest surplus grain-producing areas and to the utilization of various feed grains, such as corn in the Corn Belt, grain sorghums in the Southwest, and wheat in the Pacific Northwest.

The Department definitely recommends that the new alcohol facilities be equipped to retain all the protein byproducts possible because of the urgent need for additional protein feeds in our food-production program. It is also recommended that serious consideration be given to the applications of producer-cooperatives in the allocation of alcohol plants because of their interest in the production, handling, and processing of grain, and their interest in the use of protein feed byproducts.

Attached are tables and maps showing the amount and location of grain supplies.

Sincerely yours,

GROVER B. HILL,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Under all the circumstances, does not my colleague think that it is only fair to say that, regardless of the merits of whether synthetic rubber should be made from alcohol produced from grains or from butadiene produced from oil, that these factors have not been the real cause of the delay in the production of synthetic rubber? I ask that because only recently the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs held a rather extensive investigation as a result of the charges made by Mr. Jeffers, and certainly it cannot be said that he has not been on the job.

Mr. MAHON. He has been very energetic.

Mr. THOMASON. He ought to be commended for his efforts, regardless of whether some of his criticisms were just or unjust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. However, it should be borne in mind, I believe, that the real cause of the delay in the production of synthetic rubber is this thing about which Mr. Jeffers has complained, that he could not get priorities with which to get materials—pumps, compressors, and things of that sort—to build the plants. It has not been a question of the merits as between alcohol produced from grain or butadiene produced from oil, as I see it. The trouble has been that because of Hitler's terrible submarine warfare, escort vessels, airplanes, and bombers and what not must of necessity be built. The War and Navy Departments have insisted, as I think they have a right to insist, that the escort vessels and the materials that are necessary to make them are entitled to have the highest priorities.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is correct in asserting that escort vessels must come first. I am not complaining at Mr. Jeffers for not getting priorities.

Mr. THOMASON. The trouble is that there has not been material available out of which to make the plants, the compressors, the pumps, and the steel. There have not been available the high priorities on the most critical building materials.

Mr. MAHON. I would not differ with my friend on that point. Of course, there is a scarcity of material, and available material should be put to the best use, but it does seem to me that it would not have taken until yesterday for the War Production Board to learn that they were free to make grain alcohol from wheat, grain sorghum, or corn. I am complaining of the bungling and the failure to use to the best advantage the scarce materials.

And I trust that my keen interest in this matter has not led me to overstate the case or to indulge in improper criticism.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman does not maintain that all rubber should be made from grain alcohol?

Mr. MAHON. I do not care how it is made. I am sure the gentleman and I share the same views with respect to that. The first consideration is getting the rubber. Let it come from both oil and grain and from any other available source.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the majority leader took issue with the statement made by a highly respected, an outstanding American, our former President, Mr. Herbert Hoover, that "time runs in our favor in this war." Only a limited opportunity of debate was afforded at that time. The issue raised by the distinguished majority leader deserves more than passing attention. In fact, every utterance of the majority leader merits extended consideration. His comments are never commonplace. But his address on that occasion took on an added significance because of the acknowledged qualities of leadership of the man against whom he leveled his criticism.

I shall not dwell at any length on the motives which prompted the majority leader to take the course which he did. It can hardly be supposed that the effort took on the characteristics of earlier days when a notorious smear campaign demonstrated the depths to which prejudice could drag public utterances. Nevertheless, it can hardly be disputed that he speaks with the authority of an administration spokesman, that his utterances reflect its attitude. Nor shall I make any extended observation on the wisdom of the majority leader in raising the issue at a time when unity means so much. Suffice it to say, that many of us who are mindful of the dangers of disunity are extremely doubtful of the wisdom of drawing the inferences which the majority leader did from Mr. Hoover's statement.

The war in which we are engaged is a titanic struggle. It is a struggle which, because of its magnitude, entails the most far-reaching obligations ever assumed by any nation. It is a struggle which, because of its scope, tests the supremacy of our strength and of our willingness to sacrifice. It is a struggle which, because of its consequences, commands the unrelenting, the unyielding, the uncompromising will of our people to contend for a final and complete victory. To this conflict America has committed herself. There can be no turning back—no compromise. There is no middle ground. There must be either the humiliation of defeat or the exultation of victory. The former we refuse to contemplate. The latter we intend to enjoy.

What factors are involved in this struggle? Are we to dismiss from our minds entirely the preparations made by the enemy long before the fateful days of September 1939, which resulted in the accumulation of vast stores of every conceivable device of destruction? Are we to ignore completely the handicap which the enemy enjoyed and which it hoped we could not overcome? Waging war is a wearing down process—an attrition of the enemy's resources. The greater the day-by-day attrition, the closer the approach to victory. But the wearing down—the whittling away process—does take time. And it will continue to take time, a shorter time perforce now than at the beginning, and certainly a shorter time the harder we apply ourselves; but every day will count until the texture of an intolerant tyranny is completely destroyed.

The majority leader disputes the statement that the element of time—an indispensable part of a wearing-down process, of a constant weakening of the enemy's resistive strength—is a factor in our favor. If my convictions on this question were of my own contriving, if I stood here and made assertions of my own evolving, I might be charged with presumption in opposing one who is responsible for the direction of legislative policies in the prosecution of the war. But I offer in support of my contention nothing of my own, unless it be the claim of common sense. I make no profession of my tactical ability as a strategist or of my crystal gazing skill as a prophet. Nor do I urge upon you the acceptance of an abstract theorem simply as an academic proposition. In opposing the position taken by the majority leader, I depend upon the authoritative sources which I, as a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House, am privileged to examine and which I would be at liberty to quote but for the limitations imposed by war. These limitations, however, do not prevent me from drawing the conclusions of a reasonable man. These limitations do not prevent me from insisting here and now that every day that sees disintegration and dissolution taking place on a wider scale and on a broader base in the ranks of the enemy—whether on the home front or on the battlefield—means in Berlin, Tokyo, and Rome a weakened resistance and a waning resolution. These limitations do not prevent me from insisting that every day that sees the bombing of industrial establishments, of submarine bases, of shipbuilding centers, in Germany and in the countries that are its vassals today, contributes to whittling down the strength of the enemy. These limitations do not prevent me from insisting that every day that sees the continuance of this uninterrupted attrition makes our offensive the more effective as well as the less costly, and hastens the day of the enemy's collapse. Is the prospect of this dissolution and disintegration, this weakened resistance and waning resolution, an unpleasant one? Is the anticipation of the whittling down of the enemy's strength an undesirable one? Is the hope of hastening the day of the enemy's collapse an unwelcome one?

If we are not to regard the element of time as a favorable factor, are we to assume that the majority leader advocates a policy of headlong haste? As I see it, that is the alternative which he offers and espouses. Otherwise, there is no point to his criticism of Mr. Hoover's statement. Is the war to be prosecuted with reckless abandon—in a slap-dash, helter-skelter fashion—regardless of the price always exacted by impatience and impetuosity? Have we not had enough of boisterous bustle? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the time taken for painstaking planning is time well spent and that it in no way weakens the effectiveness of an offensive.

Reflect for a moment on the success which attended our African invasion—the move that contributed more to Hitler's realization of the certainty of his defeat than any move thus far made in the war. The success of that adventure was due primarily to the careful planning which preceded it, to the days and weeks spent in fitting together the pieces of the plan into a perfect and composite whole, all of it timed with a clock-like precision, that would have been impossible without punctilious care in preparation. Those preparations took time. Days upon days were spent on every detail. Items were checked and rechecked—all of it taking time—the element which the disciples of headlong haste no doubt grudgingly gave. If time was a valuable factor then, and it was, what new element has suddenly intruded? What has converted a valuable asset into a worthless liability? The large-scale offensive operations to be launched against the Axis partners will require a steady flow of expeditionary forces. Are we to assume that future expeditions will be less carefully planned than the one which led to Casablanca? Are we to accept the hazards of hit-or-miss policies? Can successful offensives be expected if the element of time in preparation is tossed aside? The suggestion that such a course should be adopted is repellent to me as I envision the cost of these expeditions and these offensives—the flower of American manhood. And I certainly cannot reconcile the majority leader's idea of precipitous haste with the solemn warning just sounded by the President that the Nation still faces "reverses and misfortunes."

Many of us remember the old-fashioned copy books of our boyhood. They were part of the "horse and buggy" days. There comes to my mind one of the maxims of that day that I copied and recopied over and over again—"time is worth while, if the task is worth while."

That maxim does not suggest procrastination or slothfulness or unnecessary delay. It does not suggest the wisdom of failing to strike when the iron is hot. But it does suggest taking time to do a given task well and thoroughly, and it implies that dangers lurk where finishing a job is looked upon as more important than the thoroughness with which it is done. That maxim suggests orderly procedure rather than hit-or-miss methods—completeness rather than incompleteness in preparation—competency rather than incompetency in execution—a clarity of perspective rather than a fog of confusion in the approach to any undertaking. In the instant case it suggests that the effective driving force of well-planned, skillfully organized, and competently directed campaigns will expedite the prosecution of the war and save the interminable delays which always can be counted on as the cost of plunging without planning.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no greater encouragement could come to our enemy than the impression that we despaired of our ability to take the necessary time to defeat him and that we have become as desperate as a gouged gambler. Does he play his cards with the calm confidence of assured and certain winning? If time is not in our favor, Mr. Chairman, then desperation can be substituted for deliberate decisions and the urge of despair can take the place of confident assurance. This is the alternative offered by the majority leader. But let it be remembered that a price must be paid for the gambler's chance, which in this case will be paid for in men—in the needless wastage of our most cherished possession.

I doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the majority leader will deny the assertion that the element of time is a factor in any undertaking. It is either a favorable or an unfavorable factor which must be taken into account. It is an advantage or a disadvantage. As we review the record from Pearl Harbor down to today, are we to draw the conclusion that our growing strength is to our disadvantage? And will tomorrow's additional strength add to such disadvantage? Are we to conclude that the potency and power of the arsenal of democracy are destined to decrease as the day-by-day drive on Berlin develops? If the tomorrows offer nothing in our favor, shall we abate the efforts of the millions of American men and women who are straining every fiber of their being to reach a peak of production in the weapons of war? Are their efforts in vain? How shall we account to our people for the shortages rigorously exacted by a rationing process which reaches into their very means of subsistence, if time does not work in our favor? Why the giving up? Why the sacrifice? Why the doing without? Are these exactions a part of a subtle scheme to revolutionize our social structure or are they the price which we must pay to take advantage of the element of time in the expeditious prosecution of the war?

If time is not in our favor, what have we to depend upon for the complete victory which al of us crave and for which we fervently pray? How are we to meet the reverses and overcome the misfortunes of which the President warned unless time is afforded us, leaders and people alike, to work harder and longer and more conscientiously and unselfishly than we have up to this time?

The majority leader's position is made the more untenable, not only by the warning sounded by the President, but by the declaration of Mr. Stalin as he directs the most successful continued offensive thus far carried on against Hitler. "Time is working against Fascist Germany," Stalin declared a day or two ago. Russia is waging an offensive operation, yet Stalin believes that time is a factor in his favor today. By making that statement he is not suggesting a slowing down of his offensive, a slackening of his effort, which would permit a recovery by Hitler. Quite to the contrary. Stalin is encouraging his countrymen, challenging them to even greater efforts as he warns them that Germany is "not yet conquered."

I have tried, Mr. Chairman, to find some reasonable basis for the charge leveled against our former President by the majority leader. I have sought to interpret his opinion in the most favorable light—in light that would appeal to reason, to common sense, and to patriotic impulses. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have failed in this effort. The majority leader claims that Mr. Hoover is lacking in vision, "unable to grasp and meet the problems of our country at war," and that if we follow "his advice the result will be a stalemate of the war, a wave of appeasement sentiment, and a negotiated peace." I see in this attack, Mr. Chairman, something which smacks of the style to which resort was had during the last campaign, and which we had reason to believe was buried effectively by the ballots which were cast. You will remember that repeated efforts were made to cast aspersions on the patriotic purposes of many men and that ridicule was heaped upon them for lacking in vision. I shall not detain the House at this time to discuss this phase of the question. If these men erred, they erred out of too much confidence in the assurances which had been given to the American people—in a too-literal acceptance of the promises made by men in high places.

Upon what ground does the majority leader base the charge against Mr. Hoover? He is disturbed over the publicity which followed our former President's appearance before the Senate committee. He has quoted from the releases which were given to the press. I know that the majority leader would not want the impression to prevail that he was not fully informed of the contents of that release, or that he would lift from the context a sentence upon which to pin an assertion. Let me direct the majority leader's attention to other phrases in that release and to other recent public utterances of Mr. Hoover, so that his mind may be set at rest and be free of the fear which haunts him. From that release I quote:

> The United Nations now have a ring around the European Axis and the Japanese. From these rings we are doing an effective job of aggressive attrition to their home fronts. Germany and Italy have passed their zenith, and are steadily degenerating on both the military front and the home front. They will be weaker in 1943, and still weaker in 1944. Japan cannot grow stronger; she is losing more tonnage and planes than she can construct.

In that same release we find this further positive statement:

> Total war is inevitably a race of exhaustion between nations. And we must make a strong finish.

I ask you, do those statements smack of appeasement, of a negotiated peace?

Reflect for a moment on other recent statements made by our former President:

> Our country is now engaged in the greatest struggle of its existence. All Americans, regardless of their past views, are now united in a single purpose. That purpose is to achieve victory and thereafter build a world where we can hope to live in peace and security.

Again:

> We are in this war, and the only road out of it is victory. There will be no liberty anywhere if we lose the war.

Or:

> Today, again, we have a victory to win in war, in making peace and in restoration of freedom. And again as before it must be won by our united effort, by the heroism of our men in the field, and by the eternal vigilance of a free people.

Can you find a suspicion of appeasement in these declarations?

Or again:

> Industry is doing the magnificent job which only an industry born of free enterprise and directed by men who have risen by merit could do. The Army and the Navy are proving to have the full courage and skill of our race—and will prove that by victory in this war.

Or again:

> If we would attain lasting peace now, we must win this war with undoubted victory.

Mark you, these are the utterances of one whom the majority leader is fearful of as an inducer of appeasement. I urge you to examine these declarations with a most critical eye—I plead for no charity in your interpretation—and then, in a dispassionate, honest, fair, unprejudiced spirit, with a mind open to reason rather than beclouded by intolerant convictions, make your own appraisal of them.

A stalemate of the war, a wave of appeasement sentiment, an urge for a negotiated peace could develop in one way. It could come from one source—from a fear of defeat, from a sense of futility, from a conviction of the worthlessness of waging war to a decisive victory. Can you find the slightest suspicion of such suggestions in what Mr. Hoover has said? His statements are the very antithesis of such suggestions.

Why, I ask you, are there rumors of peace feelers by Hitler today? Is he seeking to negotiate because of his confidence or because of his despair? Are we to assume that a fear of defeat, a sense of futility, a conviction of the worthlessness of waging war to a decisive victory will be the result of the certain assurance which is ours of our growing strength and of our enemies' increasing weakness? Stalemate, appeasement, negotiated peace are the fruits of a disheartened spirit and a discouraged soul.

Are we likely to be disheartened in spirit or discouraged of soul as we see the tangible evidence of the ever-growing success of a free people to thwart the designs of tyranny? Are we to believe that the American people will be stalemated in their purpose or inclined to appease or to negotiate as the mounting might of America makes itself felt on every battlefront? Men negotiate for settlement when they are fearful of the outcome of an undertaking, not when they are assured of success.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that our spirit to carry on to a decisive and complete victory will be helped rather than hampered as time affords us ever-increasing opportunities to mass greater and greater striking force. Time will give us more ships and still more ships, more planes and still more planes, more guns and still more guns and more and more determination to carry the war to a glorious and triumphant conclusion.

No, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hoover did not speak in terms of appeasement. Mr. Hoover spoke in terms of victory.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KILBURN].

FARM LABOR SITUATION

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Chairman, the rationing of processed foods which began this week has raised an important issue in the minds of the American people. Could the present food shortage have been avoided, or is it the inevitable result of endless bungling among incompetent bureaucratic officials and Government politicos?

Everyone knows that one of the underlying reasons for the serious food situation now facing us is the shortage of labor on American farms. Proper foresight among Government leaders could have prevented much of this difficulty—but foresight among Government leaders certainly has left much to be desired, particularly in the War Manpower Commission. Now that the horses are out of the barn, of course, these same officials are frantically rushing around trying to lock the various doors through which the horses escaped.

Soldiers are being sent into the fields to save the crops. The President stated only a few days ago his belief that young people of high-school age could do a lot to relieve the shortage. Perhaps they can—but these are patchwork methods. What of the skilled farm hands that are needed to raise the stock? It takes a lifetime of experience to run a livestock farm properly. Can freshman farmers furloughed from high school step into the places of farm managers drafted into the Army? Will crops and animals adjust their schedules to week-end attention only, from willing but handicapped novices? There are some officials who do not seem to appreciate the intricate demands on a farmer's experienced knowledge. The New York City markets commissioner only the other day reminded these officials of the facts.

I hope the Department of Agriculture and the Office of Price Administration will remember—that it takes longer to bring a calf into the world than it does to create a destroyer. Nature cannot and will not be hurried.

There have been many reasons for the shortage of farm labor. At a time when heavier and heavier responsibilities are daily being placed on American farmers to assume the obligation of feeding the world, close to 2,000,000 workers have been drained from the farms into the armed services and war factories. Hundreds of farms have been sold out for lack of present and anticipated help. Thousands of heads of cattle have been prematurely killed off for market for lack of farmhands to care for them. While the labor shortage pulls tighter and tighter its stranglehold on American farms, the production of farm machinery has been reduced to a crippling degree—40 percent of the 1940 total—and even this goal cannot be accomplished on time, according to the Secretary of Agriculture. Wages in industry have soared, and the overtime clause has encouraged them, but farmers still must work regularly up to 70 and 80 hours a week, with no such compensation to show for it.

Those 6,420,000 pigs and mother sows that were slaughtered on the New Deal altar back in 1933 would have produced some mighty welcome meat during this ever-increasing crisis. The skeletons in the closet of the New Deal cannot, unfortunately, be picked for meat now that we need it.

I read in the paper the other day that Russian soldiers, who would rather have food from us than guns, are spreading—not butter—but lard on their black bread, eating tallow, and linseed oil.

Let us hope that we do not force this condition on our own sons—our own soldiers—because of the failure of those of us on the home front to demand intelligent handling of our labor supply.

America, the arsenal of democracy, must produce the food that will win the war. While praying for military successes abroad, we cannot tolerate political bungling at home.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said in the last few weeks about the creation of a permanent committee on aviation in the House of Representatives. Members of the House have expressed themselves pro and con on the subject. It has now reached a point that this matter of internal organization within the House of Representatives has attracted the interest and the fancy of some of those outside the House of Representatives. Yesterday practically every Member of the House received a telegram from some air-line pilot in the United States expressing his objection to the creation of this committee. Those telegrams, my friends, were sent out at the instance and demand of a man named Behncke, Dave Behncke, being the head of the Airline Pilots Association. What his interest is in the matter is more than I can understand. Those telegrams reached the House yesterday en masse. It was a movement well directed and well timed. I am perfectly willing that the membership of the House make up their own minds as to whether or not this body should in this internal problem be guided and directed in its activities by Mr. Behncke or his organization.

Of course the pilots who are sending in these telegrams do not realize the import of the thing they are doing. Nor do they comprehend what is sought to be done for them, or they would not be sending the telegrams. Only this morning there comes to my desk a copy of a letter directed to Mr. LEA, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, from a great American, Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Green objects to the House of Representatives creating a standing committee on aviation. Mr. Green in part says:

It has come to my attention that an attempt is being made to take from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which you are chairman, jurisdiction over legislative matters relating to civil and commercial aviation, including air-line transportation.

He further says—and I shall put the whole letter in the RECORD:

Certainly what is not in the best interest of the industry cannot be in the best interest of the laboring people of the industry.

Mr. Green's letter, in full, is as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LEA: It has come to my attention that an attempt is being made to take from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which you are chairman, the jurisdiction over legislative matters relating to civil and commercial aviation, including air-line transportation.

In view of the splendid way in which your committee has been handling civil aviation problems, resulting in our country's civil and commercial flying assuming a place second to none in world aviation, I see no reason for any such changes as are being proposed. There appears to be little or no good reason to take the jurisdiction over civil aviation legislative matters from your committee and place it in the hands of a new legislative committee, the members of which may be well-meaning and sincere, but certainly they will not have the broad and complete grasp of the commercial aviation picture as do the veteran legislators of your committee. Could it be that this move is primarily to create another committee so someone may have what they deem better committee assignments, or to enhance some other form of political expediency? Civil flying has in the past suffered considerably from the intervention of politics, and it seems likely that this move may be similarly tinged.

The air-line pilots are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor as are other groups of laboring people in civil aviation. Certainly what is not in the best interest of the industry cannot be in the best interest of the laboring people of the industry. The pilots and other air workers see no good reason for taking the jurisdiction over legislative matters affecting civil aeronautics from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and, I might add, I have always respected the advice of the pilots on matters of this character, because I have through the years found it to be sound.

The American Federation of Labor, therefore, is strongly opposed to the passage of House Resolution 23, which takes jurisdiction over commercial aviation legislative matters from your well-experienced and thoroughly seasoned committee, where it is being handled most satisfactorily, and turns it over to a new committee which can only be regarded as inexperienced in such matters and whose actions would certainly be extremely unpredictable. In other words, this seems to be another one of those cases where it would be far better to leave well enough alone and not take a chance, especially with a matter that is as important to the country as civil and commercial aviation at the present time, with particular reference to air transportation.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Green, you are entirely correct. The best interest of this industry and the best interest of the people of the United States is the only thing that those who sponsor this legislation are interested in, and Mr. Green the sponsors of this legislation are interested as well in the well-being and the best interest of those people who labor for the industry. So, Mr. Green, you and I start with the same premise.

Likewise Mr. Behncke has probably been so busy with other things that he is not quite as conversant with the organization of the House of Representatives as are we who are a part of the House of Representatives and who, incidentally, will not yield to Mr. Behncke or to you in our interest in that, things best for commercial aviation, the country, and those who work for commercial aviation.

Nothing affecting aviation should be adopted unless it is in the public interest, and unless it is in the interest of this industry, and so far as I am concerned—and my actions in this fight will bear this out—I want the question of whether or not there is to be a standing committee of this House on civil aviation determined purely upon its merits and upon nothing else. I am not interested in any collateral matter. I am not interested in the propaganda that is going around that probably I am active in this matter only because I want to be chairman of the proposed new committee. This thing is too important to be determined on the basis of personalities. I think I would make a good chairman of the committee, but I am not particularly interested in that. I think I know the subject, but who is the chairman of the committee makes no difference to me. All I want is that he shall be a man who knows the subject matter, whether it is myself or somebody else. I am not concerned. No; let us keep this squarely on the basis of merit.

Now, I come to another matter, and I hope Mr. Green that you, Mr. Behncke, and the air-line pilots of the country will follow closely in the RECORD what I am about to say. Only a few days ago there was reported from the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce——

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I interrupt the gentleman before he goes into that bill reported from another committee, because I should like to say that many Members of Congress, including myself, have received communications by telegram and letter from air-transport pilots.

One in particular came from a young man in my district that I had first interested in flying. Now he is a pilot for a transport concern. He wrote me a letter in opposition to H. R. 23. I later talked with him by telephone and asked him if he understood the subject matter. He told me frankly that he did not. He told me that he had been requested in a rather demanding fashion that he send the telegram. He said he knew nothing whatsoever about the subject matter.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I am sorry. I only have a short time. I am going to discuss a part of this bill that is very involved, and then I will yield if my time permits.

I hope the Members of the House will interest themselves in this. This is H. R. 1012, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes. I would direct your attention to page 94 of the bill. I would direct your attention to section 29, found on page 94 of the bill, and I read:

Subsection (a) of section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 is hereby amended by striking out the words "every air carrier shall"—

Now, just keep that in your minds. Let me tell you what the present situation is. This section deals with contracts made between the air lines, air carriers and others. The existing law provides that every such contract must be filed with the Civil Aeronautics Board and that before that contract shall have legal force, it must be approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board. That is a "shall." That is a "must."

Now, under existing law the air lines of this country entered into a contract with the Railway Express Co. which incidentally is 100 percent owned, by the railroads. The air lines entered into a contract with Railway Express, wherein they agreed that Railway Express should have a monopoly upon the gathering of air express, and the contract further provides—and this cannot be successfully refuted—that Railway Express shall fix the rates that the air lines will charge for the transportation of air express subject only to the approval of the Board. That contract has been before the Civil Aeronautics Board for a great many months. It has not been approved. Until it is approved it is subject to the Sherman antitrust law. It is an illegal contract. It is not in the public interest, because if the railroads of this country are to be able to say to the air lines what the air lines may charge for the transportation of air express, then the public will suffer as they do today, when air express is from 10 to 12 times as high as rail express, and certainly much higher than it should be.

Now, if section 29 of this bill is adopted—I challenge you to read it and I challenge anyone to successfully refute the statement that I am about to make—if section 29 of this bill is adopted the contract between the American Railway Express Agency and the air lines of the United States will become legal, unless it is positively disapproved by the C. A. B. And it will place this contract and all akin to it beyond the authority of the Department of Justice to prosecute for violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Not only that, if section 29 of this bill is adopted, this is what it provides: In the first place it says "strike out the word 'shall' and insert the word 'may'" That would make it read:

Every air carrier may file with the Board its contracts.

Then what can the Board do? This bill points it out specifically and definitely. Any contract entered into by an air line with any other person or any other individual or corporation does not, under this bill, even have to be filed with the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. LEA. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Board would have control over the rates paid by the express company.

Mr. NICHOLS. The contract is already in existence.

Mr. LEA. The idea of this provision is that at the present time the law requires all contracts to be filed.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is right.

Mr. LEA. There are a great many contracts of minor character, and the volume of business is becoming so great——

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, I do not yield further. I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. LEA. It is left in control of the Board. It says "to the extent required by the regulations."

Mr. NICHOLS. No, no. I will read it to you:

The Board may, by order, disapprove any such contract, whether or not previously approved by it, that it finds to be adverse to the public interest, and may approve any contract that it finds to be not adverse to the public interest—or may advise the parties that it proposes to take no action with regard to such contracts or agreements.

Until the Board disapproves a contract the contract is legal and binding and is outside the pale of the law governing violations under the Sherman Antitrust Act. If they simply advise that they are not going to take any action, then and only then can one party to the contract compel the Board to act. I read it to you:

Provided, That in any case in which the Board proposes to take no action with respect to a contract or agreement and so advises the parties thereto, any such party may petition the Board to take action.

That is the only instance in the bill where a party to that contract can petition the Board to take action on the matter. What does it mean? This means that contracts could be entered into indiscriminately and never have to be filed with the Board, and would be legal and beyond the antitrust laws until the Board could find them and compel their filing, and finally disapprove them.

I would rather have control over the rate structure of a going transportation than to own its stock, if I was its competitor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman.

I am bringing this up now so there will be plenty of time for free and open discussion before this bill comes to the floor for consideration. Here is the test of whether or not there should be a standing committee on aviation. Is the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce so busily engaged with other important matters that it cannot give proper attention to the consideration of aviation legislation? It is a great committee, membered by smart men. Yet, they have just reported H. R. 1012 containing section 29, and if H. R. 1012 is passed with section 29 in it you can wrap the air lines of this country up in a package, tie a red ribbon around it, and deliver it to the railroads; and I challenge successful refutation of that statement. Now, I am sure that this was not done deliberately by the committee, but the bill will speak for itself. Thus, the committee did not have sufficient knowledge of the subject matter to detect this dangerous provision in the bill, or they were too busy to give sufficient attention to the study of the bill before some urge compelled them to report it out.

Following is section 412, subsection (a) and (b) which is existing law:

POOLING AND OTHER AGREEMENTS

FILING OF AGREEMENTS REQUIRED

SEC. 412. (a) Every air carrier shall file with the Authority a true copy, or, if oral, a true and complete memorandum, of every contract or agreement (whether enforceable by provisions for liquidated damages, penalties, bonds, or otherwise) affecting air transportation and in force on the effective date of this section or hereafter entered into, or any modification or cancelation thereof, between such air carrier and any other air carrier, foreign air carrier, or other carrier, for pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, traffic, service, or equipment, or relating to the establishment of transportation rates, fares, charges, or classifications, or for preserving and improving, safety, economy, and efficiency of operation, or for controlling, regulating, preventing, or otherwise eliminating destructive, oppressive, or wasteful competition, or for regulating stops, schedules, and character of service, or for other cooperative working arrangements.

APPROVAL BY AUTHORITY

(b) The Authority shall by order disapprove any such contract or agreement, whether or not previously approved by it, that it finds to be adverse to the public interest, or in violation of this act, and shall by order approve any such contract or agreement, or any modification or cancelation thereof, that it does not find to be adverse to the public interest, or in violation of this act; except that the Authority may not approve any contract or agreement between an air carrier not directly engaged in the operation of aircraft in air transportation and a common carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, governing the compensation to be received by such common carrier for transportation services performed by it.

Following is section 29 of H. R. 1012, which proposes to amend the above existing law:

SEC. 29. Subsection (a) of section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the words "Every air carrier shall" at the beginning of such section, and by inserting in lieu thereof "Every air carrier may, and, to the extent required by regulations or order of the Authority, shall"; and by striking out subsection (b) and inserting the following subsections:

"APPROVAL BY AUTHORITY

"(b) The Board may by order disapprove any such contract or agreement, whether or not previously approved by it, that it finds to be adverse to the public interest or in violation of this Act and may approve any such contract or agreement or any modification thereof that it finds not to be adverse to the public interest or in violation of this Act or may advise the parties that it proposes to take no action with respect to such contract or agreement: Provided, That in any case in which the Board proposes to take no action with respect to a contract or agreement and so advises the parties thereto, any such party may petition the Board to take action with respect to the contract or agreement in which event the Board shall approve or disapprove the contract or agreement in accordance with this section. No order of disapproval shall be entered except after reasonable notice and hearing.

"AGREEMENTS BETWEEN DIRECT AND INDIRECT AIR CARRIERS

"(c) In the case of a contract or agreement between an air carrier indirectly engaged in air transportation and an air carrier directly engaged therein, affecting the terms and conditions pursuant to which the former utilizes the facilities or services of the latter, an order of disapproval under subsection (b) of this section shall, effective upon such date as may be fixed in such order, make unlawful the carrying out of such contract or agreement in the respects specified in such order."

Mr. Chairman, finally, if section 29 of this bill is adopted the public will suffer. Forget about individuals, forget about the individual desire of members of any committee of this House. We are charged with the duty of guarding the public interest, and the public interest here is being flouted and disregarded, not that any member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would deliberately do it; no, no; but they were either too busy or for some reason did not catch this thing, because if they had it would not be here now.

I bring this up this early so it can have free and open debate. I do not want to do anything in this fight under cover; I do not want to take any left-handed jabs at anybody; and I do not want to put the rush act on anybody. So there is plenty of time. This bill for the creation of the Committee on Civil Aviation will not be on the floor probably for a week, and if my statements that I have made today are wrong somebody will prove they are wrong. And then if they do, well, maybe you had better not pay any attention to me any more. But if I can prove they are correct—and I shall have more to say on the subject; I cannot cover it in 20 minutes; I shall have more to say on the subject in the days to follow—if I can convince this House that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has permitted to come out of it a bill which would, if enacted into law, permit the railroads of this country to throttle and stifle the expansion of the air lines and would throw to the four winds the public interest, then, I suppose I shall have no trouble whatsoever in getting agreement from a majority of the membership of the House for the creation of a committee which can devote 100 percent of its time to protecting aviation and guarding the public interest therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, if those Americans who have been privileged to live for some years in the Far East have any particular contribution to make to our country's thinking in a time like this, it is, I believe, primarily because of the simple fact that they have had the opportunity to come to know something of the psychology of the peoples who live there and with whom we must, whether we like it or not, be dealing in this war and after the war.

It is apparent that in the last 20 years of diplomatic dealings with certain oriental nations, and in our military relations thus far in the war, we have, with the best of intentions, made some grievous errors. I believe that the chief reason for such errors has been because we have tended to project our own ideas and our own reactions over into the minds of people who have not had our background and who, therefore, naturally do not have many of our ideas and our reactions.

After the last war our country went through a great period of disillusionment and debunking and cynicism. We denounced communism by name. Nevertheless, I think it can be maintained that, without quite realizing it, a great many Americans took over in their thinking one of its fundamental theses, economic determinism—the doctrine that no man or nation ever does anything except on the basis of what he or it expects to get in immediate material gain.

It became popular to try to explain all of human behavior and motivation by the simple device of dividing all human beings into two groups—"haves" and "have nots." Now, I think it was right to divide nations into "haves" and "have nots"; I suspect the error was in assuming that the only things which a nation can "have" or "have not" are those things which can be counted or measured or weighed. Japan went to war against terrific odds to try to get some things she did not have; Indians are on the brink of plunging their people into physical disaster in the attempt to get some things they do not have—but the chief things they are after are not among those which one can weigh or measure or count. They are certain intangible things, certain things of the spirit, if you will—what the orientals call "face."

On the whole we have tried as well as any nation in history to live by the Golden Rule. And it is a good rule, if only we understand it. We did to Japan in the pre-war years what we would like to have had Japan do to us. It did not work, because the Golden Rule in its ordinary interpretation is not effective when dealing with people who have different backgrounds from ours and who do not necessarily want to have done unto them just the things which we want to have done unto us. We have to read it this way, when we are dealing with people of different cultures: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you, if you were they. And that is quite a different thing.

Let us give an illustration or two. You remember a year ago, before the President made one of his Nation-wide broadcasts, he suggested that we have at hand a map or a globe or an atlas so we could follow his discussion of America's great strategic problems.

He said that to understand this war we must study geography. Surely that is true, but it is only part of the truth. More important than the geography itself is to know what the other fellow thinks when he studies the geography. It is at this point that we have not yet got down to bedrock, I believe.

Another illustration is taken from the Roberts report on Pearl Harbor. You remember it describes in considerable detail how General Short and his staff and Admiral Kimmel and his staff had met on several occasions, as was their duty, to discuss all possible methods by which an enemy might attack the Hawaiian Islands, and to make plans to repel such possible attacks. And then in two places it says that "without exception" they believed that there would be no attack by air against Hawaii. They were reasoning, in effect: "Now, if we were in Japan's place we would not attack by air. We are pretty sure that the British General Staff if planning an attack would not do it by air. Therefore, the Japanese will not attack by air." But you remember the attack came by air. Here were our greatest experts; some of them had spent their lives studying the Pacific and its geography. They knew everything about the Pacific—except the Japanese.

We find the same sort of thing in our diplomatic dealings. In the summer and fall of 1941 the State Department spent many months working out a comprehensive plan to try to resolve our differences with Japan without having to go to war. Americans did not want to go to war. We could not see any problem either Japan or we faced which would require or be usefully served by our going to war. The plan was eminently fair and magnanimous—from any western point of view. You remember some of the provisions of it. It showed Japan in ways she could not possibly refute, even if she had been interested in refuting them, how it was enormously to her own economic advantage to pull away from the Axis and to go along with us; indicated how her economy did not fit in with those of Germany and Italy, and did fit in with those of China, the Philippines, Australia, America, and the other nations around the Pacific basin.

It offered to let Japan's great export silk come into our country permanently on a duty-free basis; offered to loan, perhaps, billions of American dollars to Japan, without much thought of ever getting it back, to help Japan shift from a war to a peace economy, because, if she had been willing to do it, it would have been a cheap price to pay. You see, we marshaled all the arguments that appealed most to us and naively supposed that those were the arguments that would appeal most to Japan.

Well, the dollar may have become God Almighty to many Americans, unfortunately; but there still are some peoples in the world to whom the dollar is not God Almighty. There still are some peoples who operate primarily on a basis of spirit. And you will find the Japanese are among them and the Chinese are among them and the Indians are among them. They are carrying on a policy right today that from any western standpoint is sheer suicide, but they do it in order to try to get that thing which they do not have and which they want most of all to have—standing, equality, recognition, "face."

It does not make any difference what we think the Orientals ought to think, or what we wish they thought, or what we thought they thought. If we are going to win this war and try to work out a decent peace afterward we must deal with them utterly realistically, on the basis of what it is they really want, what they think, what they feel, what they are after. Unfortunately, we cannot find that out from the Department of Commerce reports or even from the World Almanac. We can find that out, as a rule, only from those peoples themselves, or from persons who have been privileged to live there long and intimately, and have dealt with them and discussed these things with them over a period of years.

It is only because of such a background that I presume to stand before you for a little while this afternoon to try to discuss our situation in the Pacific exactly as a doctor studies the body of a patient at the autopsy table.

Somebody may say, "Well, that is water gone over the dam; forget about yesterday; get on with tomorrow." But every experienced physician knows that practically all the progress we ever made in medicine came from this humble studying at the autopsy table, trying to see why and where we went astray; not to condemn, not to recriminate—I am not interested in that—but only to discover how in the world we could have failed to see or could have so misinterpreted the findings that were there as plain as day. This patient is dead. That is true. We cannot bring him back. We cannot bring back pre-Pearl Harbor days; but we can learn something from ruthless examination of our mistakes so that when, please God, we have another chance, we will not make those same mistakes again.

The autopsy is almost always very unflattering to doctors. We may have been perfectly convinced on the basis of the most careful study and conscientious examination that the trouble was, for example, in the stomach. We may have called in expert consultants and most of them agreed that the trouble was in the stomach. We may even have had a propaganda agency to try to convince all the relatives that the trouble was in the stomach. But if when the man is opened up the trouble turns out to have been in the liver, then, you know, it was in the liver; and it does not make any difference whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, it was in the liver.

We are facing the kind of situation in the Pacific, it seems to me, where such an autopsy study, or at least an exploratory operation, can be of great value. The first thing that is necessary is to disabuse our minds of any preconceived notions and deal with facts and people as they are, as events are proving them to be.

To begin with, if we are to understand our enemy, Japan, there are three simple observations to make. First, is this: The Japanese are a people of small stature, and like many people of small stature, or with physical disabilities, have had a terrific inferiority complex. My, what the world has suffered from men like Napoleon and Caesar with epilepsy; or the Kaiser with his withered arm; or Mussolini with his 5 feet 5 inches; or Mr. Hitler with his inability to make good at any ordinary activity.

If he had been a little more successful as an artist or a musician, if he had been a little more successful in his love affairs and had had a good home with children, a normal ordinary living, if he had even been a better corporal, the world might have been spared a lot that we are going through today. The chances are he would have been a law-abiding, respectable, honest, hard-working citizen, just as most other Germans have been. But everything he touched was a flat failure.

And so he did the thing that any man would do who is worth his salt, he resolved to surpass in something. The whole trouble was that the way in which he determined to surpass was vicious and destructive.

On the other hand, look what the world has profited from people whose reaction to their disability or sense of inferiority took a constructive, socially useful trend. Steinmetz, with his deformity; persons who were blind but yet created exquisitely beautiful things; or went deaf and still composed symphonies. Robert Louis Stevenson or Elizabeth Barret Browning, and many others afflicted with tuberculosis, unable to go out and do ordinary work like other people, yet in their sick beds writing things surpassingly beautiful, and without which the world would be infinitely poorer. St. Paul, with his "thorn in the flesh" driving him on to the ends of the earth.

Unfortunately the Japanese urge, like Hitler's, took the form of trying to conquer the world, not so much to show the world as to reassure themselves that they were not inferior men just because of their smallness of stature.

The Japanese lived for centuries alongside the Chinese, who were much more impressive physically. For almost a hundred years the Japanese have been in close contact with the western nations of America and Europe, whose people are even more impressive physically. So you see the Japanese officer, riding the tallest horse possible, or carrying a sword so long it clanks on the ground, trying to bolster up his own ego, to inflate himself into something more important than subconsciously he knows he is. We may not like this, we may think it is infantile, but it is a dominant factor in Japanese psychology nevertheless.

The second observation is this: The Japanese are a singularly unimaginative, uncreative people. They are efficient, determined, disciplined, capable, and as resolute as any people in the world, but, strangely enough, they never yet produced a single major basic invention. For centuries they lived alongside the Chinese, who are one of the most imaginative peoples in the world. Look at the basic inventions which came from China, the compass, gunpowder, silk, paper and, as a result, printing, long before it was dreamed of in Europe, porcelain—on and on you could go. Never to this day has one such come from the Japanese. They are one of the few peoples that never succeeded even in inventing a way to write down that which they spoke; had to take over the Chinese written language.

Then in recent decades the Japanese have been in contact with western peoples who are by all odds the most inventive the world has ever known. Of course, Japan smarted because of the contrast.

This lack of creativeness is not a congenital thing. It is the result of centuries of regimentation. You put Japanese in our environment with similar rewards and stimuli, and I think you will find that they will become as original as the Chinese or we are.

But in Japan everything was settled, ordained by heaven, which they believe has given them the way for all the world. A premium is placed upon blind obedience and conforming. A penalty is put upon varying from the prescribed way. The Japanese until we forced them open wanted stability, not change.

The great crime still is to have dangerous thoughts. Because if men have new thoughts in science or invention, then the first thing you know they will be having new thoughts in politics or religion. They may even begin to develop concepts like liberty, or that man can be self-governing, instead of being wholly directed by the son of heaven.

In short, the uncreativeness of the people of Japan was the inevitable result of complete control of all life and thinking by the government, if you want to put it that way. Sometimes I wish some Americans would take note from Japan of the result of complete control of life by the government and not try to impose the system on us.

So it was perfectly natural that the Japanese, suffering because of the contrast between themselves and other peoples, would seek to compensate by trying to out-invent, out-fight, out-guess the Chinese and us; that they would invent a two-man submarine, or a Zero fighter which could at least outclimb and outmaneuver anything we had been able to produce. Surely we can understand that reaction.

Then there is a third thing: Even nature has always been against Japan. She has been subject to typhoons, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, almost every year. All these factors have operated upon the Japanese psychology until as a nation they have developed a true persecution psychosis. They have brooded over their troubles, real and imaginary, until they have become the most moody, self-pitying, and morbidly introspective people in the world. Their suicide rate in times of peace is several times higher than that of any other country that keeps vital statistics.

I have seen Japanese officers in China, the conquerors, sit at my desk and say, "Why doesn't the world think more of us," and put their heads down on their arms and weep—because nobody loved them. But that does not mean they will not go doggedly on. They never had what we would call a break. They never expect to get a break. Everything they have they got the hard way, wrested it from an unfriendly nature by sheer determination and unrelenting struggle. They have believed that the very hardness of their existence had prepared them to conquer us who grew rich in a land which had incredible wealth and resources, and they believed that therefore we had become soft and too pleasure-loving to be able to "take it."

A Japanese general, after Pearl Harbor, announced: "We can defeat America because Americans have a spoiled-baby complex." They are finding out, the hard way as usual, how wrong they were when they assumed our love of comforts and conveniences meant that we cared more about things than about great principles. Perhaps we are just finding it out ourselves.

Now, when you take a nation with such a psychological background and suddenly liberate it from its inferiority complex, you have a situation that is loaded with dynamite. About 1858 Japan took over from the West universal military service. Up until that time a man could not be a soldier in Japan unless he were born a Samurai or did some great deed for which he was rewarded by being elevated to the Samurai class. The most coveted honor was to have a chance to bear arms for the Emperor, and the Emperor was also God. Their patriotism and their religion coincided; the Emperor has a double hold on every Japanese heart. That is, everything in Japan centralized, unified, pulled together around the Emperor.

In contrast, the basic religion in China was ancestor reverence; one's own family was the unit. That is, most everything in China decentralized, disunified, pulled apart.

So when Japan took over conscription she had the urge and was able to build herself up rapidly in military strength, whereas China with her tradition of regarding the military as not the highest but the lowest level of society had no psychological urge to become a great military nation.

In 1894 Japan picked a quarrel with China over Korea, and defeated China. Little Japan had overcome the great colossus of Asia.

Ten years later she treacherously assaulted Russia, and defeated her. I was studying in the Imperial University in Tokyo in the summer of 1931, and one morning a Japanese professor said to us:

> Future historians will attach more importance to the Russo-Japanese War than they do at the present time. A hundred years from now they too, will see what we Japanese already know, that the Russo-Japanese War was one of the greatest turning points in all human history, if not the greatest. It was the first time that white men went out against a colored people—and were turned back.

And if you will notice, the Japanese are still turning the white man back in many places.

Little, despised Japan, he believed, had reversed the whole current of human history. She had sounded the death knell of the white man's dominance. That is heady wine.

Then in 1914–15 the Japanese defeated the German garrison in Shantung—another white nation. Then there was the Anglo-Japanese alliance. In 20 years Japan moved from an insignificant group of volcanic islands to an alliance with the greatest empire of all times. For centuries she had been at the bottom; now she was at the top, suddenly released from her inferiority complex. Of course, it went to her head. Of course, the pendulum swung too far. Of course, she was a little arrogant, browbeating, self-conscious, and strutting, lest people not notice how important she suddenly had become.

And then at the time of Japan's greatest psychological overcompensation, two terrible things happened to her. One was at the peace conference after the war. The one thing the Japanese asked for more than anything else was that there be included in the League of Nations covenant recognition of the principle of equality of races. And England committed, with our acquiescence, if not support, one of the three incredible blunders from which her Empire crumbles today—not the commonwealth but the Empire. An Anglo-Japanese alliance—yes; but not a 16-word clause in the covenant recognizing the principle of racial equality. Japan in her new pride was slapped down. The Japanese gritted their teeth and waited, waited and worked for the day when in Tientsin they could strip Englishmen publicly before the "inferior races." What could be more humiliating? Perhaps we can begin to understand what satisfaction the Japanese derived from witnessing Sir Mark Young, representative of the proud white men who had swaggered through the Orient for so long, come down from the heights of Hong Kong, cross on the ferry, and walk up as a humble suppliant before his Japanese conquerors. Where? In the grand ballroom of the Peninsular Hotel into which previously no oriental had been permitted to set foot.

The second blow to Japan came from this Congress in 1924. America was having labor troubles on the Pacific coast. Oriental immigrants had lower wage levels, and they were able to undercut our wage and living standards. There was a real problem. Nobody denies that. If we had given as the reason for our excluding orientals the economic reason, which in most cases was the real reason, there would not have been a murmur of protest from any oriental people. They know we are a sovereign country and have a perfect right to regulate our own immigration. But we do not have a right to insult friendly peoples because of their race or color, at least not if we expect to avoid war with them. Unfortunately, the basis on which we excluded them was one of race, that non-Caucasians are ineligible for American citizenship. No matter what a man's or a woman's ability may be, or education, or culture, or charm, or professional skill, if the pigment in his or her skin is different from ours, he or she is because of that fact automatically and inescapably branded as inferior, forever condemned to a level below us—officially stigmatized. Gentlemen, that day we made war between ourselves and Japan inevitable—if and when Japan could manage to get sufficient military strength to attack us.

Americans spent many months gravely and at times heatedly debating whether the repeal of the Neutrality Act or the passage of the Lend-Lease Act or the Selective Service Act, and so forth, might lead us into war with Japan. I suspect the autopsy demonstrates that they were all shadow boxing. They were not causes; they were consequences. They were the inevitable sequelae of our own act in excluding orientals on a basis of race. Other peoples were hurt as badly as Japan. But the Chinese were too proud and too correct to snipe back and thereby lower themselves to our level. Japan in her new-found power resolved to avenge, to make us eat our words. We are reaping today in bloodshed what we sowed then in arrogance and in the belief that somehow we were above the laws of human community. Did we get enough from it to be worth all the American boys now being killed or tortured?

Perhaps a good case could be made out for passing the Exclusion Act. On the other hand, perhaps a good case could be made out for selling war supplies to Japan to help her conquer China and build up her own military strength. But surely no mind that can add up two and two and get four can ever make out a case for doing those two things at the same time. If you are going to insult Japan and make her hate you, then you had better not arm her. If you are going to arm her, then you had better not insult her.

If a man walks up and slaps you in the face and calls you a vile name, he does not hand you a revolver at the same time, or if he does, you know what is wrong with him—he is crazy. Yet this was for years the deliberate policy of a nation of 130,000,000 free Americans in the land with the finest press and radio service, greatest universities, greatest number of organizations for discussing public problems, to help us make wise decisions. It would be incredible if not so tragically true.

I do not like to say such things. Yet those are the autopsy findings. I never yet liked to tell a man that he had tuberculosis or cancer. Yet it is no kindness to him to pretend that he does not have it if he does. It was no kindness to our country all those years, and it is no kindness now for any man to close his eyes to the situation which exists. I wish it did not exist, but wishing does no good. We must deal with it as it is.

What I have already said, it seems to me, gives us some clues as to how to deal with Japan as an enemy. I can illustrate by a little story. After the Japanese seized the Chinese city in which our hospital was located, I negotiated on repeated occasions with Japanese officers trying to get permission to reopen in temporary quarters our schools which they had shelled out of existence. One day in the midst of discussion with the chief of staff of the Yamaoka Division which had its headquarters in our city, I chanced to say to him something about having served in the United States Army in the World War. He looked at me for a moment hesitantly and then his face beamed. Up until that time I was his potential enemy, but when he discovered I had once been a soldier, I was almost his buddy. Apparently he believed that anybody who had ever served in any army would, of course, think exactly as the Japanese did. He said, "You had a hard time licking the Germans, but your task was nothing compared to ours in trying to lick the Chinese." I said, "I do not understand that. The Germans are supposed to have one of the best, if not the best military machine in the world."

He said, "That is right. That is why it is easier to fight them. It is harder to fight the Chinese because they don't know how to fight." I was still puzzled.

He said, "Well, military science is the same all around the world. But the Chinese don't understand it." As I pondered that I began to see his meaning. The law of gravity works just the same in Asia and in America. The laws of chemical affinity work at the North Pole the same as at the South Pole, or the Equator. The drill regulations of the French Army, the Germany Army, the Japanese Army, and the American Army, et cetera, are almost exactly the same. Yes; military science has been essentially the same all around the world. Therefore, people who understand it would presumably fight alike. He went on, "When you fought the Germans, you could look at a map and tell from the terrain where they would put their artillery. You could tell where their infantry would come. Therefore, you could make plans to repel them. But the Chinese, they do not understand military science. They never put their infantry or their artillery in the right place."

I suppose that is what the Japanese mean when they accuse the Chinese of being insincere.

He said, "We have defeated them and defeated them and defeated them. When did they ever win a real victory? But they still won't sue for peace." Yes; that was not the way western nations carried out wars. When the French were defeated in 1871 they sued for peace. When the Germans were defeated in 1918 they sued for peace. When the French were defeated in 1940 they sued for peace. But these confounded Chinese have been licked for 5 years and still they will not sue for peace. He said, "You have no idea how hard it is to fight the Chinese." Surely, that gives us insight into how to fight Japan, or at least how not to fight her. Do not fight according to the book.

Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt a year ago last Christmas decided the basic strategy by which we were to carry on this war. It was to hold defensively in the Pacific while attacking in Europe. It was based on two assumptions. If the assumptions are sound, it is good strategy. If they are unsound it is poor strategy. Nobody knows yet for sure. The assumptions were first that we could hold defensively in the Pacific. Second, that we could dispose of Hitler and Mussolini with sufficient rapidity that Japan could not get her gains consolidated and organized and exploited to the point where she would be practically impregnable, or where it would cost us a million men and hundreds of billions of dollars and years of time to defeat her. Japan gambled we would not pay that price, that we would say, "What are we in this trouble for? We have no obligation to the Philippines which justifies such a sacrifice. Let us get our boys back home and have peace." Japan would give anything to get us to accept a Munich-type of peace now—so that she can build up to the place where she can surely defeat us and enslave us militarily and economically. Let him who thinks that fantastic be prepared to accept responsibility for the destruction of our Nation.

Now, I do not know much about the European end of the task, except that our success there depends on our ability to hold in the Pacific just as much as ultimate victory over Japan depends on our ability to knock out the Axis in Europe fairly speedily. But I do want to apply to the Pacific end of the task some of the things I have said.

There is no evidence thus far that we can hold defensively in the Pacific. Every time we have tried to hold defensively we have been licked; whenever we let Japan plan and initiate moves at her own choice and time we are playing her game, and she will strike here in force and then there in force and with every detail worked out with the most meticulous care. If we just resist her offensives, they will be as efficient and precise and disastrous as at Pearl Harbor and Manila. But if we will meet her offensives, not with defense but by taking the offensive ourselves, her military machine can be thrown out of stride relatively easily. China has proved that repeatedly. Centuries of regimentation have left Japan's men, especially her officers, no match for China's or our own men, once a plan goes awry. The white man's record in the Pacific has been one of repeated defeats, except for the three times we have taken the offensive. Each time we have won when we have upset Japan's strategy; she was not able to adjust herself, could not make the necessary changes quickly. The Chinese discovered that long ago, and so they ceased to adhere to old methods. They hit and run, developed the night attack, infiltration. Practically all the unorthodox tricks the Japs have used against us they learned from the Chinese. The Chinese did not have guns, so they had to use their wits. They have been holding Japan off all these years, largely by wits and will. Now they have got to have some guns in addition to their wits; and we have got to have more wits in addition to our guns.

We are making real progress but, unfortunately, like Japan we seem to prefer getting it the hard way. May I illustrate by the story of a young American marine officer, who was our Assistant Military Attaché in Peking. When the Japanese invaded in 1937 things looked utterly hopeless for the Chinese. They had almost nothing with which to fight except their bare hands, and their wills. And yet they were holding the Japanese juggernaut unbelievably. This young officer said: "Those Chinese have got something. We may have to fight Japan some day. We had better find out how to do it." And so he asked for and was given an assignment to the Chinese armies, and for 2 years he lived with the Chinese guerrillas, marching on foot here and there through much of north and northwest China. He retreated with them through our city only a few hours before the Japanese began to shell us. He knows more about how to fight the Japanese than any other man in our armies. Then he came home to this country, but his suggestions were not received very much better than DeGaulle's were received by the French generals. He resigned his commission, gave up his income, his seniority rights, and all the rest. Many friends and fellow officers called him a fool. He went up and down this country for months and months writing, speaking, and trying to waken us to the danger that threatened us and to get us to prepare to meet it. It was largely in vain.

Then the war broke out and he went back into the marines. He is now Col. Evans Carlson. He was the commander of the group, of which Jimmy Roosevelt was second in command, that carried out the raid on Makin Island. He and his personally trained marines using the tactics learned in China, recently returned from an excursion into the jungles of Guadalcanal, having killed 400 Japanese, with the loss of only 17 of our men. I understand that at long last he is being brought back to this country, I hope to help us understand our enemy, and to plan our campaigns accordingly.

We have been pretty much like Braddock and his redcoats. They marched out to fight the Indians in proper dress-parade order, the way they fought wars in Europe. They would die rather than degrade themselves by shooting from behind a tree or a bush. They had codes in war almost like those for duels. The main thing was not whether one killed or got killed, but whether one did it in proper form. The rules of the game were more important than victory. That is commendable and good cricket—provided the enemy fights under the same code. It is disastrous otherwise. Fortunately, for the red coats and for America, Washington and his scouts were like Carlson and his men. They knew their enemy, they were not wedded to yesterday's methods, they were not too particular about form and finesse, they resisted by attacking, and they saved the day.

The autopsy reveals that we went into this war without much real knowledge either of our enemy or of ourselves. We were a good deal like Goliath. You recall he, too, was a master of defensive warfare—he had every kind of the best and tested weapons for defending one's self that had been devised up to that time. The story is a most illuminating classic, thoroughly up to date. It describes in detail all the weapons Goliath had. His helmet was made of this, and his shin guards of that; his mail weighed so much, the staff of his spear was so thick, and its head weighed so much. He had so much armor he had to have an assistant carry his shield before him—like destroyers before a battleship. The recital of all he had and what he could do with it reads almost like one of Secretary Knox's speeches or official reports before Pearl Harbor. He, too, like Goliath, talked as if we could win over any combination of enemies in both oceans simultaneously and singlehandedly.

Then out came David. The king and his friends feared David could not fight; he had no such weapons as Goliath's. They tried to put a lot of armor on him. David refused because he knew if he fought Goliath on terms where Goliath was superior he would be defeated. I heard an admiral say last fall, "But if the Japs would just come out and fight us, we could lick them easily." Of course, we could. That is why they do not come out and fight us according to our book. That is just the point.

The mighty Goliath was insulted when David came out. What could that little stripling do to him? Or what could that funny-looking Austrian paperhanger and ex-corporal do to us? Or that puny collection of volcanoes called Japan? It was an insult to Goliath's—and our—dignity. David did not have the orthodox weapons, so he used his wits and he took the offensive. He invented the first torpedo bomber. He had five ready but needed only one. When Goliath lumbered out, the record says David "hastened and ran to meet him," sent over his torpedo bomber and down went Goliath—or the Repulse or the Prince of Wales.

Why do I recite all this? Because America has plenty of the best kind of wits, the intelligence, the ability, the initiative, the inventive genius, the resourcefulness, the courage, the will; America has everything if she will just get rid of her Goliath state of mind and deal with the situation realistically as it is. We cannot survive by defending yesterday and by its methods. We must boldly move ahead, true to our country's noblest traditions.

In addition to understanding our enemy and understanding ourselves, there is a third thing we must do if we are going to win, if we are going to be able to hold in the Pacific until we can dispose of Hitler in Europe. That is, we must understand our allies far better than we have thus far. We cannot alone hold defensively in the Pacific—and we should recognize it frankly. We were able to take the offensive temporarily a few times—at Midway, north from Port Moresby, and at Guadalcanal, especially in Admiral Halsey's audacious and unorthodox naval attack of last November. Three times we concentrated our power and took the offensive, three times we won. But we cannot hope to mount more of even these limited offensives in the Pacific now, to say nothing of a large-scale offensive, unless our allies hold.

That means that we must keep Russia in the war. The materials we are shipping to Russia are, from the standpoint of our own security, just as necessary for helping Russia keep strong forces in Siberia as they are for helping her pound Hitler on her western front. Those Siberian forces have been tying up between 400,000 and 600,000 of Japan's best troops, plus the shipping and the factories in Japan necessary to supply those men. If Russia went down, it would be a disaster for us in Europe and equally a disaster for us in the Far East. The released Japanese armies would immediately be turned against China and ourselves.

We must also keep China in the war. China is tying up, it is estimated, between 800,000 and 1,200,000 of Japan's troops. Most of them are not Japan's best troops. Japan uses her shock troops to drive into a new area, then she replaces them, usually with men between 35 and 45 years of age, who cannot get out and do much heavy campaigning. They have to garrison every railroad station and cut every bridge, every tunnel, every large village, and highway in occupied China. Tens of thousands are killed every year.

China also neutralizes an enormous amount of Japanese manpower and the shipping and the factories in Japan necsary to supply those men. We have to keep China in the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. I am sorry, but no more time is available.

Mr. JUDD. That is quite all right, Mr. Chairman. The thing I wanted to discuss today was a little of the background of our job in the Pacific, especially certain psychological considerations.

If at some future time there is opportunity I should like to go on to the conclusions which it seems to me follow inexorably from the background I have tried to present. I am grateful for your patience in listening to the report of one who has lived out there, and feels under obligation to try to share his experiences and some lessons to be gained therefrom. I do not pretend to be any smarter, or any wiser, than others—of course not. It is merely that I had the chance to see what most of you have not had opportunity to observe first hand. Surely, I would be derelict in my duty to my country if I did not report what I have seen in the hope it will help us to come to a fuller realization of the character of our enemy, and the magnitude of our task.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to what to my mind was perhaps the greatest and most informative speech I have ever heard delivered on the floor of this House with reference to the background situation in the South Pacific as it relates to this country and one of the countries with which we are now at war, namely, Japan. I have always maintained that Japan was our greatest menace—and I so maintain today.

The Russians are taking pretty good care of the Germans.

The reason I am taking this time is this, not that anything we are going to say on the floor of this House will create disunity among the Members of the House, nor will it create any disunity in the country, but try as hard as we can, and I have been saying it repeatedly on the floor of this House, that I think we should all keep away from past issues that were buried at Pearl Harbor in 1941. But like Banquo's Ghost, they will not stay down. Regardless, the American people are as one person today. They are 100 percent back of the President, our Commander in Chief, in the winning of this war, and so is Congress 100 percent back of our Commander in Chief.

The specific reason I am taking this time is caused by a colloquy that occurred between the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and myself with reference to what action should have been taken prior to Pearl Harbor with reference to this very country, Japan. I know the distinguished gentleman from Missouri did not intend to say anything that would cause a rehashing of those matters, but we rather got off on it and had sort of a field day on the mistakes or omissions that occurred before Pearl Harbor.

I believe every Member of the House agrees with the distinguished gentleman when he laid down the plan for peace after the war. I also believe mistakes were made before Pearl Harbor, and they will no doubt be made in the future. I think mistakes were made by all of us from the President down. Of course, our hindsight is always better than our foresight. I thought at the time the President made his famous quarantine speech in Chicago in the fall of 1937, when he spoke about quarantining aggressor nations, that it was premature. I did not believe, as was suggested here by the gentleman who spoke a few moments ago, that the people should say much until they were ready and prepared to follow through, and confessedly we were not ready or prepared to follow through at that time.

Congress in 1937 passed an act authorizing the President to place an embargo upon the exportation particularly to Japan of war materials. At that very time and from that time on we were shipping to Japan 54.4 percent of the materials they were using to kill Chinamen with and to prepare for us. What were those materials? Trucks, copper, pig iron, machinery, and engines, and also high-test gasoline for the squadrons of Japanese airplanes. We have an acute shortage of every one of those materials today.

I thought the President should have put an embargo on then and said so June 27, 1939, on this floor, because I felt these very materials were going to be used, not only used against China, but also used against this country, because I have felt, for years past, knowing the Japanese as I did, having spent time on the coast, that they had designs on the Pacific coast.

The point was made this morning by two distinguished gentlemen from Texas that, if the embargo had been used, Japan would have cut off from us the rubber supply which we received from them until the embargo was actually placed. Let us suppose that the embargo had been placed and we had been cut off from the supplies of rubber, Japan would not have received the materials with which she has made guns, produced arms and ammunition with which she is fighting us today. Perhaps we would have been better off if we had put the cards on the table, taken the bull by the horns, and had started the production of rubber in this country, as we might have rubber today.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Has it been called to the attention of the gentleman the well-laid plans to defeat the United States, published back in January 1942?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE. Has the gentleman had that matter called to his attention?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, I know about it.

I made my statement on the floor of this House in June 1939, and urged at that time that that embargo be placed upon the exportation of these materials. But, Japan was in no condition at that time to declare war on the United States. She had to get these materials from us before she was sufficiently armed to declare war upon us. Now, my friends, I realize it is perhaps not good policy even to bring these things out, and I have tried to keep them down, but, as I said awhile ago, sometimes it cannot be helped, sometimes you have got to follow through on what you have said before.

As idealists, if we are going to lead the world in morals and ideals we must not travel around with the dove of peace and Bible in one hand and with the other one reach out and grab the profits and gold made from the sales of death-dealing agencies, or we will have to suffer the consequences.

In support of that statement I want to call the attention of the House to an article that appeared in Labor, on the 15th day of September 1940, entitled "Patriotic Oil Moguls," which reads:

A Norwegian freighter has just left Houston, Tex., with 770,000 gallons of aviation gasoline for Japan—

Get that; on the 15th day of September 1940—and 1,000,000 barrels more are expected to follow.

This, in spite of an embargo placed on such shipments by our Government on July 27. Now, what happened?

That articles goes on to say:

Why has the embargo been raised?—

Get this—

Because, after Washington closed the American market to Japan, British producers rushed in and offered the little, yellow men all the "gas" they needed to wipe out the Chinese, and possibly the American and British Navies.

To the ordinary citizen, that looks like a nasty "kettle of fish." But you must remember these oil magnates must have their profits, even if in grabbing for the gold they jeopardize the safety of their own countries.

It has been said that we are known the world over as the grabbers of money, and if we are going to lead the world in morals, idealism, and good government let us abandon that policy, and carry the dove of peace in one hand and the Bible in the other, instead of reaching out with one hand for the gold that we will make out of the profits of the sale of materials to kill human beings.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think it is about time that we began to think about America and the future of America and the future of the American people, rather than concerning ourselves about putting a bottle of milk upon everybody's doorstep?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, of course I think that "bottle of milk" speech was the most silly and asinine thing that I ever heard of coming from a responsible person.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, the question of farm credit and rural finance has received so much comment due to the bringing to life of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation that I include the following table from the 1942 Agricultural Statistics from page 702, published by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Total amount of federally financed non-real-estate loans, on Jan. 1, 1942, $1,358,125,000.
Total amount of insured commercial bank loans on Jan. 1, 1942, $1,449,937,000.

From the above table you will note that Federal rural non-real-estate financing was begun in 1923 as emergency crops and feed loans of $2,359,000. This was followed in 1924 by loans through the Federal intermediate credit banks of $42,732,000. By 1930 we find the Agricultural Marketing Act revolving fund. In 1932 we had the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation put in operation as a part of the R. F. C., though the loans were not made until 1933. This type of loan was replaced by the P. C. A., and the R. A. C. C. has been allowed to liquidate. Its recent entering in the loan field is with the funds paid back by the borrowers of this agency. You can also note that though as high as $144,000,000 of these personal property loans were made in 1 year by the R. A. C. C., there are only $5,531,000 of these loans still to be collected.

These R. A. C. C. loans were made generously. In many cases the loans were made on a semirelief basis and not directly on the basis of the cash amounts the property would bring on the market at that time. In other words, the loans were made as character loans, and also on the basis of the normal agricultural value of the personal property. Their repayment shows how short-sighted anyone is that has not faith in the rural people of America.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the commercial banks have increased their loans from eight hundred and seven million in 1935 to one billion four hundred and forty-nine million on January 1, 1943. You will also note the gradual expansion of some of these other agencies. You will also note that during the past 7 years no new agencies have been organized.

An analysis of the place of these Federal-financed programs would take much more time than I have today. The basis of their origin, the reasons for their development, the contributions to the welfare of the Nation they have rendered, and the future place of these institutions in the financial structure of our economy, would require many hours to fully discuss. It cannot be approached on a partisan basis, as both parties have been supporting legislation that brought these institutions into existence. The abundant credit available today has changed the picture. Many non-Federal-financial institutions are eager to render the service performed by these agencies.

Many of these same banks were compelled to dispose of their chattel mortgages. But that is a long story.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON].

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BALANCED MANPOWER: THE KEY TO VICTORY

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the talk of the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD. There was one statement in that talk, however, with which I wish to take issue. He made the point that when the immigration law of 1924 was passed, when we laid down the principle that no oriental could become an American citizen by migrating here, that laid the seed for this war. We have a great many racial problems in America, and in my opinion they cannot be solved by adding more brown men and black men to the population. I am not putting this upon the basis that we are superior to them, but we are different from them, and we can get along well if we keep apart. I concur heartily with him on the proposition that we ought to lay emphasis on the Pacific war and that we ought to take the offensive against Japan.

I want to address myself for a few moments today to the matter of manpower, to try to point out, if I can, that there are some very fatal defects in our manpower set-up. In the first place, I am interested in this matter because I spent several years in a selective-service organization as chairman of an appeal board in California.

That experience gave me an insight into the pulling and tugging for the manpower of the Nation by the military, the farmers, and the industrialists.

My experience in the World War as a flier made me realize that any future war would be total war. What is meant by total war? It is a war in which all of the resources of the Nation—the human resources, the physical resources, and even the spiritual and intellectual resources of the Nation are bound together into a mighty force to strike the enemy a deadly blow. The American Legion 20 years ago realized that our next war would be a total war and prepared a universal-service law whereby they advocated the drafting of all of the resources of the Nation in the event of war—men, money, property, credits, and everything that would be needed in this total war, including Government control of prices, and so forth.

In a total war balanced manpower is the key to certain and quick victory. Also, if the home front is disorganized and does not work, the war front will be disorganized and ineffective. The success or failure of the war front will vary directly with the success or failure of the home front.

Manpower is our most fundamental and basic resource. From it come those that must do the fighting that alone can win the war; from it come those that will make possible the production for our armed forces and for those at home. The productive forces of the Nation in a total war are so interwoven with the military forces that for all practical purposes they are really one. Therefore, we must, by planning and an over-all point of view, so weld these forces together as to produce the greatest efficiency in each.

As far as I can determine from what has been done and what has been said, we have not really tackled this problem in a broad, fundamental, and comprehensive manner. In 1940 when we began to withdraw men from civil life for our armed forces we had in these forces 500,000 men. It soon became obvious that the war demands would take many of our producers from the ranks. This has continued until by the end of this year there will have been withdrawn 10,500,000 from productive ranks. Naturally this would create great dislocations in our productive force. To aggravate the problem the productive forces have been called upon to continue to increase their production. To further complicate the matter, there has been a great migration of people from parts of the country and from certain occupations to other parts of the country and to other occupations.

Someone in the great national effort must take a view of the whole picture and must divide up this Nation's manpower in the right proportions to keep our great war machine in balance and going at top speed. Otherwise, each group interest would pull and tug and pillage other groups for its share of the manpower. The result might be utter chaos, part of which is now here. The armed force, which is the spearhead of the mighty war effort, stretches its tentacles down into every farm and every factory in the land to get what it needs to wage the war successfully. The armed forces being so dependent upon the productive forces, we can see that the productive forces cannot be robbed too much or the armed forces will lack the very things they need to exist and to fight the war. And at the same time the productive forces, while being depleted, are called upon to increase their production.

We have less men than we normally needed to do more work than they did before. In other words, we must have some kind of rationing of our national manpower. These matters were clearly understood by the President. On April 18, 1942, he issued an order creating the Manpower Commission. The Chairman was Mr. McNutt, who is also Federal Security Administrator. Here is what that Chairman was ordered to do:

Formulate plans and programs and establish basic national policies to assure the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the Nation's manpower in the prosecution of the war; and issue such policy and operating directives as may be necessary thereto.

Estimate the requirements of manpower for industry; review all other estimates of needs for military, agricultural, and civilian manpower; and direct the several departments and agencies of the Government as to the proper allocation of available manpower.

And among other things—

Formulate legislative programs designed to facilitate the most effective mobilization and utilizing of the manpower of the country; and, with the approval of the President, recommend such legislation as may be necessary for this purpose.

Ten months have now elapsed since the order was issued. What has been accomplished? Has there been a formulation of plans and programs to establish basic national policies to assure the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the Nation's manpower?

I have been trying to find out if broad basic matters have been considered. As far as I can learn the problem has only been considered piecemeal. One group considers the agricultural problem; another group considers the industrial problem, whether there shall be a 40-hour week or a 48-hour week and similar problems.

In total war there is no well-defined line between the armed forces and the civilians. They are closely knit together. The war machine is like a delicate organism. A disruption in one part disrupts all parts of it. The productive effort or lack of effort manifests itself directly at the front. If our productive effort is good it means quicker victory. That means less loss of life and less wounded men. To show you what that might mean I need but cite you what happened in the great Argonne drive. In that battle, lasting 46 days, we lost about 21,500 men. That was an average of 600 a day. Had the war terminated 1 week earlier we would have saved 4,200 men who are now lying in the national cemetery.

Let us look at the arithmetic of this problem, reduced to its simplest form.

The number of employed persons over 10 years of age, according to the 1940 census, was 52,000,000.

This was divided as follows:

In agriculture, 9,100,000.

In nonagricultural pursuits, 42,900,000.

In other words, at the time selective service began to take our men for the Army, 52,000,000 persons carried on the work of these United States.

By the end of 1943 the armed forces will consist of 11,000,000 men, of which 10,500,000 were brought in after 1940.

This leaves a total of 41,500,000 who must do the work formerly performed by 52,000,000 people. It is a little more aggravated than that because our demands for production have stepped up because of commitments under lend-lease and our stupendous war program.

We can assume that the proportionate decrease in manpower in the various groups is equal, although that is not exactly true.

Think of it—one-fifth of our 1940 manpower has been taken from us.

How are we going to handle this situation?

How are we going to keep up our agricultural production with a drop of about one worker out of every five?

Is our workweek the right length to take care of the situation? The 40-hour week was put into effect to spread labor. With a surplus of labor it was proper to make the work hours per week shorter.

But now we must do much more with less workers. Will an increase in hours per week solve the situation? If the 48-hour week is placed in effect in so-called nonessential employments, are the employers able to survive if time and one-half is insisted upon? How can absenteeism be cured so that the workers will work every day? Have any studies been made to determine if in war plants the unit of work per man is what it should be? I do not mean sweating, but we should require each man to give us his best effort. Many of these men are out of the war because they are in war plants and their war occupation is not their regular one. Their friends and neighbors have sons and husbands engaged in warfare with their very lives at stake. We have a right to expect them to give us their very best effort, and if they are not doing so to insist upon it.

Has an inventory been taken to determine how many more women can be used in the war effort?

In other words, has a budget of our national need for manpower been made so that whatever allocations are determined upon will produce the maximum results in our war effort?

In short, has the Manpower Chairman given serious consideration to the formulation of plans and programs to establish basic national policies "to assure the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the Nation's manpower in the prosecution of the war"? That was his order on April 18, 1942. Ten months have elapsed. He has several other big jobs, but none of them compare with this job and none are as vital to the Nation and to its people. His efficiency in this job may mean the saving of thousands of lives. If this man is too busy we should get a man who can give it his full time. There are men available who could do this job and do it quickly. With the basic picture worked out we could then fill in the annoying and complicated details.

Let me say here the Army and Navy are doing a good job. They, of course, had the advantage of an organization and much earlier planning. But they had a plan, they are working it out and their part of the job will click. They have said they believe that we can have an armed force of 11,000,000 and that in their computations they had considered the industrial and agricultural productive forces of the country. Their determination that our productive forces could sustain that large a force was naturally based upon the assumption that the productive force would be efficiently organized and guided. That is the job of the Manpower Chairman. He must furnish the leadership and get together the basic plan. And it would not hurt if he told the country what it was. We cannot wait. Twelve thousand of our men are going out every day to fight our battles. They and their loved ones are entitled to know that those in charge of the manpower problem are handling it expeditiously and efficiently. If they are not, we should get someone that can. When our very existence is at stake and the lives of these young men are thrown into the furnace to save us, the least we at home can do is to see that the home front is properly led.

There are ominous signs that this job is not being carried out in the manner or in the time that the President's order contemplated. Confusion and indecision are rampant.

In agriculture, for instance, there are already dangerous warning signals. The people are confused. They want to cooperate, they are willing to work hard, but they do not know what is wanted. Rules are put into effect that hamper and obstruct and confuse them instead of helping them toward better production goals. I shall place in the RECORD at the end of this discussion certain data on agricultural production in California, which is indicative of conditions throughout the land. Think of it. In the county in which I live there was a loss of 125,000 tons of tomatoes because of lack of manpower, and similar losses in over a dozen other crops. What does that mean for the Nation and for the future? Already serious shortages are being felt throughout the land and the future may see more serious shortages.

There are likewise many weak spots in industry. I need not point them out here. Suffice it to say that one of the main cogs in our war leadership is not functioning as well as we have a right to expect. It is not pleasant to stand up here and say these things. But when the lives of our sons are at stake someone must say them.

Perhaps these matters should be corrected by Congress passing laws laying down the broad principles which should govern our administrative leaders in the productive effort. There are two bills pending in Congress now, the Kilgore bill in the Senate and the Wadsworth bill in the House. It is significant that both of these bills state as their purpose the thing which is set forth in the President's order and which has been so imperfectly carried out to date.

For your information I read from the Kilgore bill:

That it is the purpose of this act to (1) inventory and mobilize all the economic resources of the United States, including manpower, facilities, materials, technical and scientific knowledge, and natural resources for maximum use in the provision of military and essential civilian needs; and (2) adjust and stabilize the economy in accordance with the needs of full mobilization and other conditions created by war.

And from the Wadsworth bill:

SECTION 1. (a) The Congress hereby declares that in view of the critical nature of the present war and in justice to those in the armed forces of the United States, it is necessary to provide further for the comprehensive, orderly, and effective mobilization of the manpower and womanpower of the Nation in support of the war effort.

I hope what I have said has caused you to think further about this problem and to insist that something be done. The mighty cable of national effort to win the war comprises thousands of strands of civilian and military effort. The military strands are interwoven with the civilian strands. The military strands are sound and tough and are and will carry their part of the load. Some of the civilian strands are weak and rusty. They are the ones which reduce the effectiveness of the strong strands. Let us hope and pray that the direction and administration of our civilian effort will improve. It can release a veritable geyser of human effort if it will furnish leadership and take the shackles off our productive effort. I earnestly hope that this may be done.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I take this occasion to again thank my constituents for designating me to represent them. The Third California district is one of the most varied and also one of the most productive in the entire United States.

We produce in quantity a greater variety of agricultural crops than any other district in the United States. We have a great many thriving industries. We have such great permanent Navy and Army projects as the Mare Island Navy Yard and McClellan Field, as well as dozens of other Army and Navy projects placed during the present war. Some of these will undoubtedly be permanent. No other district has a greater interest in the proper utilization of our manpower than this district, so that we may maintain our high degree of production. Thousands of our sons have entered the Army and Navy. Some are now among our far-flung forces and many more will soon be fighting our battle for freedom in all parts of the world. Let us organize our productive effort so as to speed the day of victory and the return of our boys.

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY CROP LOSSES; 1942 SEASON

(A. E. Mahoney, agricultural commissioner, San Joaquin County, Calif.)

The following report is a résumé of the crop losses incurred in San Joaquin County for the 1942 season with special reference to labor shortages:

|---|---|
| Asparagus: | |
| Producing acres | 34,000 |
| Number of acres unharvested as a result of labor shortage | 7,000 |
| Approximate tonnage | 5,250 |
| Approximate farm value | $525,000 |
| Strawberries: | |
| Producing acres | 175 |
| Percentage of crop unharvested | 65 |
| Approximate number of crates unharvested | 47,250 |
| Approximate farm value | $47,250 |
| Sugar beets: | |
| Acreage | 18,000 |
| Number of acres disked under in the spring as a result of labor shortage to thin and weed | 1,000 |
| Approximate farm value | $100,000 |

Harvest of the crop at the present time is far behind normal and beets are continually losing sugar as a result of not being harvested on schedule.

| Cherries: | |
| Producing acres | 4,100 |
| Percentage of crop unharvested | 30 |
| Number of tons unharvested | 5,000 |
| Approximate farm value | $500,000 |

Reasons for losses:

1. Serious labor shortage.
2. Small sized fruit in some varieties.
3. Low prices which in many cases were a result of not getting the fruit harvested soon enough to carry properly. Delay in harvest also brings the fruit in competition with later cherry districts.

Plums, apricots, and peaches: The loss in these fruit crops was silght due entirely to prolonged cool weather during harvest thus allowing growers a much longer harvest period than normally occurs.

| Tomatoes: | |
| Pear tomatoes | 12,629 |
| Round tomatoes | 10,176 |
| Total acreage canning tomatoes in county | 22,805 |
| Harvested tonnage | 172,854 |
| Unharvested tonnage | 124,580 |
| Average number of tons per acre unharvested | 5.20 |
| Tomatoes—Continued. | |
| Average number of tons per acre harvested | 7.58 |
| Percent harvested | 60 |
| Percent unharvested | 40 |
| Acreage of canning tomatoes in 1941 | 17,209 |
| Tonnage harvested in 1941 | 141,113 |
| Average yield per acre 1941 tons | 8.2 |
| Percentage of increase in tonnage over 1941 | 28 |
| Percentage of increase in acreage over 1942 | 32 |
| Approximate farm value of unharvested tonnage | $2,000,000 |

Grapes: Growers were able to pay excessively high wages for harvesting their crop. Tokay grapes which sold for fresh consumption and wine grapes for shipment were not subject to ceiling prices and therefore grape growers could afford to pay more than other farmers who were limited by ceiling prices on their commodity. None of the crop remained unharvested.

FACTS CONCERNING 1942 CANNING-TOMATO SEASON, SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY

1. Shortage of labor required to harvest crop reported by almost all growers.
2. Large percentage of crop unharvested due principally to a shortage of labor.
3. Killing frosts on mornings of November 5, 6, and 7 ended harvest.
4. Crop on vines at frost time mostly mature fruit which would have been picked prior to frost had sufficient labor been available.
5. Start of harvest season later than normal. One cannery reported processing as many tomatoes in August of 1941 as in September 1942.
6. Killing frosts also shortened season for delivery. One cannery reported completion of processing on November 18, 1941.
7. Tie-up at canneries due to a shortage of labor. Many growers reported 24 hours or longer in making deliveries.
8. Shortage of boxes occurred at canneries. Growers not only were required to wait for unloading but also for empty boxes. In some instances growers were sent home without boxes, necessitating laying off of crews.
9. Canneries in most cases were running short-handed and some canneries were unable to obtain sufficient labor for night shift. Employees worked many hours overtime and those canneries which operated the night shift had mostly volunteer labor on this shift.
10. Sufficient trucks were available with few exceptions. However, the long period of waiting at the canneries to make deliveries accounted for those exceptions.
11. Many growers express an unwillingness to grow tomatoes next year primarily as a result of seeing so much tonnage lost in the field as a result of labor conditions. Type of labor employed in harvesting tomatoes very undependable. Growers never knew from day to day whether or not they would have a crew.
12. Tomato pickers averaged from $1 to $1.50 per hour on a piece-work basis.
13. High wages did not stimulate workers to work longer hours or to remain on the same job, or to do satisfactory work.
14. School children assisted some in harvesting tomatoes, but require supervision, instruction, and experience.

MUDDLING IS OUT WHEN A SON GOES

(By E. A. Evans)

This is written by a man whose only son, aged 18 years 1 month and 12 days, went away this morning to join the Army.

I went with him as far as I could in the chilly dawn. We waited together, not talking much, in the bare assembly room of the draft board in the basement of a dingy old school, until a brisk corporal came in and read a list of 70 names, 1 of them my boy's.

I saw him square his shoulders and walk out to a big waiting bus, and I looked after that bus until it vanished far down the street on its way to the induction camp in Virginia. And it wasn't all pride—though it was that, too—that swelled up in me and hurt my throat.

Then I walked to the office, trying to think about a subject that has claimed much of my attention as a newspaper writer—the squabbles and confusions and muddles of the war effort on the home front.

But somehow my thoughts were not quite the same as they had ever been before.

HE'S HEARD IT ALL

I have heard it said that these things are inevitable in an undertaking so vast, under a President whose genius is for great leadership, not for the details of efficient organization; that somehow the weapons and the food will get produced, in spite of muddling; that it's useless to worry about a War Production Board row, or a failure to solve the manpower puzzle, or a fumbling attack on the problem of food production.

I have heard all that, and have resented it rather mildly, believing that these things would cost me higher taxes, delay for a while the day of victory, and prolong the little inconveniences of wartime.

Today I know that whether Mr. Roosevelt provides or fails to provide a better home-front war organization may mean a whole world's difference to my boy's mother and to me.

Mr. Nelson, Mr. Wickard, Mr. McNutt, and the other so-called czars are not doing as good a job as needs to be done. I don't so much blame them, for they are victims of a system, or a lack of system, that is not their fault. They have no means of going to the President regularly and frequently with the conflicts and differences bound to rise among them; no way of getting his prompt, firm decisions—and no man except the President can make many of the decisions that are imperative.

JOB FOR EXPERTS

The size of the Army and Navy, for instance. I have little right to an opinion about that, for I don't and shouldn't know the grand strategy. Congress shouldn't attempt to settle it, for most Congressmen can't know much more about it than I do. It shouldn't be left to the generals and admirals, for they think first, and properly, only about getting as many men as they can possibly need.

Only the President, the civilian Commander in Chief, whose duty it is to know all about both the military and the home-front requirements, can determine the size of the armed forces to my satisfaction.

If he says 11,000,000 men this year, with my boy as one unit among them, all right with me. But then I want him to make some more definite decisions. This country can put 11,000,000 men into uniform, and equip them and supply them, and grow the food to keep the war won after they win it—but not unless many things are done that haven't yet been done.

I don't want Mr. Nelson wasting his time on rows with the Army and Navy. I don't want Mr. McNutt and Mr. Wickard fiddling away precious days on phony manpower and food-production schemes. I don't want confusion in Washington. I want the quarterback to run the war-organization team, and keep it working as a team, and see that every member understands and obeys the signals.

HE'S ONE OF US

Yes, that's asking much of the busy President. But I know now how much I have to lose. If Washington muddling prolongs the war 1 minute, and that minute means my boy doesn't come back, victory, and all the fine things Mr. Roosevelt promises for this country and the world after victory, won't mean much to me.

There must be many millions of people in America—parents, wives, brothers, sisters—who feel as I learned to feel this morning when my son went away. With the induction rate rising to 12,000 a day, their number must be growing.

We can be the most powerful bloc in America—a pressure group of people who are willing to go hungry and cold and ragged, if necessary, and who ask nothing for ourselves except that the Government be organized to win the war quickly and bring our boys home safely.

I hope we can make the President understand what we want. And surely we can, for after all he's one of us.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, in the appropriation bill now before us we find an appropriation for three and one-quarter million dollars for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, as well as an appropriation of a little over a million dollars to complete the experimental laboratory at Cleveland, Ohio.

I am glad to find this item in the bill. I think many times we have overlooked the importance of the work done by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Our Army and Navy and the units of our aviation industry have cooperated extensively with this committee. The enviable position in which we find ourselves in the aviation world, I believe, is due largely to the work of the Advisory Committee.

I wanted to take 3 or 4 minutes this afternoon to discuss a subject that will soon be before this House. Reference has been made to it this afternoon. That is, the formation of a standing committee to deal with civil aeronautics. The day before yesterday my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] made a very interesting address in opposition to the creation of such a committee, but in that address he indicates that he feels a charge has been made that the committee presently handling aviation legislation, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has a prejudice against civil aviation. I can only speak for myself. I am only one of nine Members of this House who introduced a resolution in this session asking for the creation of such a committee, but I assure my good friend from Tennessee and the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that it was the furthest thing from my mind to charge this great committee or any member of it with having any prejudice against civil aviation.

I want to repeat in part what I said the other day, that I appreciate, as I know everybody now knows who has followed that legislation, the contribution that the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has made to the advancement of aviation in this country, going way back to 1920 and continuously thereafter. It was not in my mind that there was any incompetence on the part of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but it sifted itself down simply to this: Are the problems of sufficient size and magnitude that we need a standing committee, a group of men who will devote their every possible energy to solving the problems of the present and the future? I sincerely believe that the work the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has before it this year and every other year makes it a physical impossibility for them to keep up with these problems. This is manifest in the report filed with the bill H. R. 1012. The first major amendments to the act of 1938 are proposed in the bill, and still it was only possible to have 9 days of hearings consisting of about 2 hours a day. No representative of the 27,000 licensed pleasure pilots in this country were heard; no representatives of the various State regulatory bodies were heard, and no member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will deny that there is a very grave constitutional question raised in certain sections of this bill. I cite these facts simply to indicate that time being as pressing as it is, members of that committee could not give it the time to which I feel the industry is entitled. As a matter of fact, does it not sift itself down to this when we come to make a decision: Whether we are going to listen to the testimony and the desires of men who represent important units of the aviation industry, or whether we are going to listen to men like Mr. Green whose interest in the subject concerns only one phase of it? Whether we are going to listen to men like Captain Rickenbacker who heads one of the great air lines of the country or listen to people who perhaps for purely personal reasons feel things were not being well handled?

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read down to and including line 4 on page 2.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1975) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on the floor today and to include in those remarks at that point certain excerpts from existing law and a portion of the bill H. R. 1012, and also a letter received from Mr. William Green.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on the floor today and to include certain excerpts from letters and other material, which will not be very long.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] that he may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial as part of his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and to include therein an editorial from the Washington News and a table showing the loss of agricultural crops in San Joaquin County, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] may extend his own remarks and include therein an address made by him at the Commodore Hotel, New York, on Sunday, February 21, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] may extend his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the bill today may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders, I may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE WOMEN WHO TAKE CARE OF AMERICA'S HOMES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my own remarks, and to include therein a very fine editorial from the Washington Post relative to the WINS, the women who will carry on the work without any uniform or without any glamor or without any ultimate appreciation of what they are doing, the women, many of whom, with a smile, are sending the men to the front—their husbands, their fathers—carrying on perhaps the prosaic work of washing dishes, taking care of homes and children, and keeping up the strength and health of the family; the women who in many instances must take the place of both father and mother to their children; the women who must manage on a very much lowered budget; the women who must bravely keep on smiling when they know they must bear the loss of the men in their families for the sake of others; the little-sung heroines of war.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

WINS TAKE OVER

She is not on a 48-hour week. Her's is a 7-day round-the-clock job. She works alone without the stimulus of companionship. She wears no uniform, no insignia. She gets no citations, no medals, no pay check. But at last she has been given a name. She is a WIN. By bestowing this title on the American housewife and making her an official part of the mobilization for war, the Office of Civilian Defense has given homemaking a recognition that may affect its status permanently.

Many women leaders have long contended that active homemakers should be classed as producers just as if they were in offices or factories, and rewarded on the same definite basis. Now, thanks to the efforts of a national magazine, the Government has officially recognized homemakers as producers in the war effort. And the WINS have come to join the WAACS, the WAVES, and the WAFS. And who knows but what more definite hours and more definite rewards for the sun-to-sun vocation of housewifery may eventually grow out of such action?

No group is more vital to the winning of the war just now than the 20,000,000 prospective WINS. They are the ones who must cushion the impact of food rationing, who must see that Americans are kept fit and healthy and gastronomically satisfied despite the decrease in food supplies. They must be the chief conservators of war materials, as fats and tin cans, and also of home goods, as clothes, house furnishings, electric equipment. They must function as doctors, nurses, plumbers, electricians, dry cleaners, launderers, delivery boys to save manpower, rubber and gasoline. In addition, they must be the chief morale builders of the Nation, sustaining their menfolk by their cheer and hope, adjusting their children to a world of war, and training them for a world of tomorrow, and keeping, as far as possible, life functioning as usual so that the "home" which absent men dream of will be awaiting them on their return.

This is a large order. But American housewives are meeting it valiantly. It is something that their efforts are being recognized officially and that they have been given a name and program, even without benefit of pay check.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 707. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Attorney General.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 26, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everlasting Father, we pray that the world's great crisis may bind us to something beyond the clouds which overshadow us; we praise Thee that Thy love and light are without limit. We rejoice that as the potter knows infinitely more than the clay, so we trust to Thy overguiding will, Thy chart of faith and sight. Blessed Lord, do Thou increase the power of that faith in us which deepens, broadens, and dignifies the enduring worth of human life.

Almighty God, we thank Thee with bounding gratitude for our own dear America, beautiful for pilgrim feet and for patriots' dreams which see beyond the years. Wherever its reaching hand extends do Thou widen the paths of freedom and brotherhood. Ease the stress and the strain of our vital energies which are so often consumed by the fever of just living. Oh, lead our people to give themselves pause, to meditate upon the deep things of the soul, on time and its meaning, on life and its mysteries, and on the privileges we thrust aside; when thus alone jealousy and suspicion are purged away. At this altar the splendor of youth is revealed, the pride and health of life are magnified, and we draw the future near and claim it for our own. Heavenly Father, give to our President blessings of good cheer, rest, and growing strength. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 12. An act to amend the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," as amended, by authorizing loans for mineral-development purposes in time of war;

S. 660. An act to prevent certain deductions in determining parity or comparable prices of agricultural commodities, and for other purposes;

S. 677. An act to amend the National Housing Act, as amended;

S. 739. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the attendance of personnel of the Army of the United States as students at educational institutions and other places"; and

S. Con. Res. 7. Concurrent resolution requesting that an appropriate medal be designed for presentation to the President in connection with his recent trip to Africa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 839. An act to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res 82. Joint resolution to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing joint resolution, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LODGE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following department:

Department of the Treasury.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a copy of a bill that I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PATMAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial appearing on February 19 in the Asheville Daily Citizen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER]?

There was no objection.

STRIKES AND SLOW-DOWNS IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, the country and the American war effort has again been insulted by a strike and a slow-down in an aircraft factory in this country. The International Association of Machinists yesterday closed for 3 hours two large Boeing Aircraft plants making Flying Fortresses. A further shut-down or slow-down is threatened.

On numerous occasions since I came here I have voted for and I have spoken for the outlawing of all strikes and slowdowns in war industries. It is too bad that Congress has been unable to enact such legislation. Anyone who willfully stops or slows down war production in this country is an enemy of this Republic. Any kind of proteering out of war is criminal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in regard to proposed aviation legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. PRIEST asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal and at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes in opposition to a proposed standing committee on aviation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON H. R. 1691

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 1691.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF DEFENSE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 121, Rept. No. 186), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to conduct an investigation of the progress of the defense housing program, with a view to determining whether such program is being carried forward efficiently, expeditiously, and economically, and with a view to determining whether the authorization of additional appropriations for defense housing purposes is necessary.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation, or otherwise, as the committee deems desirable.

TRANSPORTATION OF CIVIL EMPLOYEES OF THE NAVY

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 129, Rept. No. 187), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1691, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to pay the costs of transportation of certain civilian employees, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. O'HARA addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a petition of the Ottawa County Farm Growers Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RAMEY].

There was no objection.

FARM LABOR

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the subject of drafting the boys on the farms who are producing the necessary food to win this war is becoming very critical. Because of the inroads made upon these food producers by the local draft boards, many of the farmers are compelled to either quit farming or to cut their production materially. This is especially true in all Central and Midwestern States. I know this is true in Indiana, as I have received untold numbers of letters and notices of farm sales which tell the story.

Much confusion has resulted from the conflicting statements which have been made on this subject by the Manpower Commissioner and the head of the Selective Service System. We read the statement that the farm boys are to be deferred in order that they may produce the necessary food for victory. Then when we read the list of the boys who have been inducted into the armed service of our country we find many farm boys' names included. The farm boys are being inducted regardless of the publicity that is given out by those department heads to the contrary.

The people know of these inconsistencies, and they re greatly alarmed over these drastic inroads which are being made. When the farm manpower is lessened, that limits production of food. With the present rationing orders forced upon us, which we assume are essential, it is time that those in power awaken and lend a hand to aid in the production of the food which is so highly essential to our victory in this war.

All realize the shortage of food now, and by the end of 1943 this shortage will be much greater. If the war continues, and the end is not yet in sight, this food shortage in 1944 will be one of our greatest problems.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LEMKE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CROSSER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

AN OUTSTANDING EDITORIAL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an editorial from the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include therein editorials on the subject of the antiracketeering bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

WE NEED "HOME RULE" ON PUBLIC POWER

Mr. NORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

[Mr. NORMAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

"SENATE"

"For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1943, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 approved June 3, 1926, as amended."

Page 1, after line 7, insert:

"To enable the Official Reporters of Debates of the Senate to pay employees of their office engaged in work connected with reporting or transcribing of official proceedings of the Senate additional compensation amounting to 10 percent of their earned basic compensation as is not in excess of the rate of $2,900 per annum, in accordance with the terms of Public Law 821, Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, approved December 22, 1942, $676.17."

"INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

"THOMAS JEFFERSON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to enable the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two-hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans', approved July 30, 1942, fiscal year 1943, $50,000, to remain available until expended."

Page 2, line 19, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$750,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri explain the amendments?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Senate has returned the bill with two major amendments. One provides $50,000 for the Thomas Jefferson Bicentennial Commission to be expended in the celebration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. The other makes a reduction of $250,000 in the amount provided for the Office of the Treasurer of the United States.

The House rejected the appropriation for the Thomas Jefferson Bicentennial Commission amendment, and the committee disapproves of the amendment reducing provision for the Office of the Treasurer of the United States. However, we are confronted with an unusual situation. Funds for the Selective Service System are completely exhausted. They are without money to meet their pay roll next Monday. Immediate action is imperative. On that account, the House committee is willing to agree to the amendments in order to secure funds for the Selective Service System.

The other amendment of the Senate, representing a reduction of $250,000, we are in position to take care of in another way.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not like the $50,000 item, but the trouble seems to be that the Selective Service System is all out of money and does not have money to meet current pay rolls for their clerical help all over the country. These pay rolls must be met on March 1. There is no opportunity for a conference at which we might be able to get rid of that item. Therefore, I can see nothing to do but swallow the $50,000 item, even though we do not like it and it is not needed at this time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I may say that the House passed this resolution a week ago yesterday. There has been ample time for the consideration of the joint resolution in detail, and it is a matter for regret that it reaches us at so late a date that we must either agree to the amendment or leave the Selective Service System without funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Speaker be authorized to sign the enrolled joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 82) to approve urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ABSENTEEISM

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, during the month of December this Nation announced the loss of 31 Liberty ships at sea. If the man-days lost as a result of absenteeism during the month of December had been applied to the production of Liberty ships, they would have produced 42 ships. So, more Liberty ships were sunk on the ways in this country due to absenteeism in December than the Axis could sink on the water.

The House Naval Affairs Committee has approved a bill to correct this situation. This morning the House Rules Committee granted us a rule on that bill, H. R. 1691, and the majority leader has assured the committee that it will be considered on the floor on Monday next.

Absenteeism—America's absenteeism—has now become Axis weapon No. 1. It is the cheapest weapon, and the deadliest, that has ever been placed at our enemies' disposal against us. Into the very heart of this huge effort of ours, the life-and-death struggle which we call our war effort, it is cutting deeper, deeper, as the race for military supremacy goes on. Our citizens have become disturbed. They sense a process of corrosion at work, undermining our war effort, eating into it like damp rot. If those who are entrusted with the command of our fighting forces seem to become desperate and helpless as they review the figures showing more and more lag in our war plants, it is because they are fighting men, with business to do on the battlefields and on the high seas, and this new weapon is stabbing them in the back.

In time of peace absenteeism is simply the failure of the worker to show up on the job when he is due. Today absenteeism is the collaboration of that missing worker with the enemies of the United States. Whether he is forced into that collaboration by circumstances beyond his own control, or whether he does so as a matter of his choice, the effect is the same. I can see no other way to define it.

[Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON further addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday next, March 2, after the address by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], a special order, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a letter on the farm problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including therein an address by my colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF USE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES AND MOTORBOATS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include two letters from constituents and an excerpt from an O. P. A. publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING IN SMALL COUNTRY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important institutions in this country is the newspaper that serves the small city or town, or the rural area. Those newspapers will have a tough time during this war. I rise now to make an appeal that in any Government advertising program, whether it be for the sale of bonds or the recruiting of personnel for the armed forces, some of that advertising should be granted to the small papers of the Nation. Those papers are more thoroughly read by the average person who takes them than are the large newspapers in the cities. Advertising space with them would produce more per dollar expended than almost any other kind. I urge this upon the Treasury and any other Government department or agency doing advertising of that sort.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a telegram I received this morning regarding price ceiling placed on potatoes in Kern County, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALL-OUT EFFORT FOR WAR IN GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. REES of Kansas addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object and do this in order that I may inquire about the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday the bill just referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON], H. R. 1691, will be taken up. This is a bill authorizing the bringing of personnel injured in Hawaii home at Government expense, as I understand. It also relates to absenteeism in naval establishments. I understand 2 hours' debate have been provided under the rule.

Then there is a House resolution, if it can be brought up on Monday, the Lanham resolution, authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to continue investigation of the defense housing proposition, which has been reported out of the Rules Committee today. If we cannot get that up on Monday it will have to wait until some later date.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand that does not require any additional money?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my understanding also.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. On Monday will we have the Consent Calendar?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will say that we may dispense with the call of the Consent Calendar on Monday. That would be my intention. We had a call of that calendar recently. However, I have no fixed views on that matter personally.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I simply want to get the program; that is all.

Mr. McCORMACK. Suppose we withhold that until a little later, and I will advise my friend and the House.

Then on Tuesday the Nichols resolution will be taken up, which relates to the establishment of an additional standing committee of the House on aviation.

I am hopeful that the lend-lease bill will be in order for Wednesday. If not Wednesday, then Thursday. In other words, I want to bring that bill up as soon as possible when it is formally reported out of committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I suppose the debate will be fairly liberal on that legislation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have informed the members that whatever they agree upon in committee will certainly be agreeable to me. Whatever agreement any committee makes on debate on any bill is satisfactory to me, particularly at this time in the session. So I assume they will arrive at an agreement that will be satisfactory to all the membership of the committee. Whatever agreement they arrive at will be satisfactory to me. However, if something develops which precludes the lend-lease bill coming up next week, then the Navy Department appropriation bill will be taken up either Wednesday or Thursday. If the lend-lease bill is taken up, the probabilities are that the legislative situation will be such that the Navy Department appropriation bill will have to go over until the following week.

That is the general program for next week. If there are any changes, I will advise my friend and the House; but on Monday and Tuesday we will know definitely just what will be taken up then.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I gladly yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I would like to find out how much time will be allowed for debate on the Nichols resolution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, in the ordinary course, in the absence of a unanimous-consent request, the debate would be limited to 1 hour. As far as I am concerned, I am putting no other legislation on for Tuesday, because I assume there is such interest in that resolution that both the proponents and the opponents of the resolution would want considerably more than 1 hour.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The facts are, the rule requires 1 hour; and if any single Member wishes to object, it cannot be longer than that?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct. But I have set aside Tuesday for the consideration of that bill because I assume that both the proponents and the opponents would want considerably more debate than 1 hour.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They both might want it and not get it, because one Member can object.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct; but I have set aside Tuesday for the consideration of that resolution alone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON AVIATION

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next there be 4 hours of debate on the Nichols resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will object at this time.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1975) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1975, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE JUDICIARY

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES, UNITED STATES COURTS

Fees of commissioners: For an additional amount for fees of commissioners, fiscal year 1942, including the objects specified under this head in the Judiciary Appropriation Act, 1942, $15,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, asked me a moment ago about the Consent Calendar, and I was unable to advise him and the House at that time. I have made inquiry, and I find there are 15 bills on the calendar, and the Consent Calendar will be called on Monday.

So I make that announcement for the benefit of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the Members of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses, military bases (national defense): For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, military bases, Employees' Compensation Commission, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the Employees' Compensation Commission Appropriation Act for 1943, $75,000, which total appropriation shall be available also for the administration of the act of December 2, 1942 (Public Law 784), and for the procurement outside the United States of supplies or equipment or special services without regard to the civil service and classification laws and section 3709, Revised Statutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes, and ask also that my time may be extended to 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order and that his time may be extended to 8 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE ENEMY WITHIN OUR GATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the Communist Party, which has been branded by the Department of Justice as being subversive, un-American, and dedicated to the destruction of this Government, flooded the country with full-page advertisements in the daily newspapers maligning Congress and spreading their poisonous propaganda through the channels of the public press.

It must have been heartsickening to our brave boys in uniform to read that treasonous filth, published by this subversive group, led by that ex-convict, Earl Browder, in what were supposed to be respectable newspapers, for the purpose of undermining and destroying this Government and everything else that our people stand for, including the Christian religion.

These people are just as dangerous to the welfare of this Nation as if they shouldered guns and made war upon the people of this country, or openly attempted to stab our soldiers in the back.

More than a hundred years ago Sergeant S. Prentiss, perhaps the most eloquent man who ever occupied a seat in this House or any other legislative body, defined the principles of self-defense in terms that apply most forcefully to our situation today, in which he said:

> The principles of self-defense, which pervade all animated nature and act toward life the same part that is performed by the external mechanism of the eye toward the delicate sense of vision, affording it, on the approach of danger, at the same time, warning and protection, do not require that action shall be withheld till it can be of no avail.
> When the rattlesnake gives warning of his fatal purpose, the wary traveler waits not for the poisonous blow but plants upon his head his armed heel, and crushes out at once his venom and his strength.
> When the hunter hears the rustling in the jungle and beholds the large green eyes of the spotted tiger glaring upon him, he waits not for the deadly spring but sends at once through the brain of his crouching enemy the swift and leaden death.
> If war was declared against your country by an insulting foe, would you wait till your sleeping cities were wakened by the terrible music of the bursting bomb; till your green fields were trampled by the hoofs of the invader and made red with the blood of your brethren? No. You would send forth fleets and armies; you would unloose upon the broad ocean your keen falcons; and the thunder of your guns would arouse stern echoes along the hostile coast. Yet this would be but national defense, and authorized by the same great principle of self-protection which applies no less to individuals than to nations.

Yet today when our boys are baring their breasts to the enemy's bayonet in North Africa, in Guadalcanal, and on every other battle front in the world to protect our Government and our homes, we see this enemy, as poisonous as the rattlesnake, as treacherous as the stalking tiger, and as dangerous as an invading foe, using the daily press to further its perfidious plans of planting the dynamite of destruction under the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> During the existing war and for 6 months thereafter, reserve officers of the Public Health Service may be distributed within the several grades without regard to the proportion which obtains among the commissioned medical officers of such service.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: Strike out lines 14 to 18, page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "During the existing war, and for 6 months thereafter, any commissioned officer of the regular corps of the Public Health Service may be appointed to higher temporary grade with the pay and allowances thereof without vacating his permanent appointment, and hereafter reserve officers of the Public Health Service may be distributed in the several grades without regard to the proportion which at any time obtains or has obtained among the commissioned officers of such service."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, there was a bill introduced to amend the public health law to take care of a situation affecting the Public Health Service. A bill is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and before the Subcommittee on Public Health, of which I am chairman, but, due to the fact that we are having to redraft the original bill and there is an emergency in this situation which this amendment will cure.

These officers in the Public Health Service are sent to all parts of the world today. They are in Africa, in India, they are in Alaska, in Iceland, in England, and any country that the Army or Navy is in these men are there at this time. The additional language in the amendment authorizes the temporary grades to officers of the regular corps of the Public Health Service during the existing emergency. It is not permanent legislation.

Similar authority exists for temporary promotions in the Navy, Army, Coast Guard, and Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. My understanding is that this is designed to take care of a temporary situation that exists during the present disturbance.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is.

Mr. TABER. It is not anything in the nature of permanent legislation, but is to meet a situation that confronts Dr. Parran, Chief of the United States Public Health Service, and it is an item which the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has not yet had opportunity to bring in here and have passed?

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. I can see no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DURHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DURHAM. I think the gentleman should point out that many of these men have been in the service 14 and 15 years with no promotion, is that correct?

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it has no effect upon the legislation which is now pending before the gentleman's subcommittee?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No.

Mr. HINSHAW. And that legislation may in due course be passed. This particular amendment has nothing to do with the type of person that may be employed by the Public Health Service?

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, by agreement on the part of the members of the committee, I am authorized to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: Page 8, line 18, after the period insert a new paragraph as follows:
> "Grants to States for emergency maternity and infant care: For grants to States, including Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia, to provide, in addition to similar services otherwise available, medical, nursing, and hospital maternity for infant care for wives and infants of enlisted men in the armed forces of the United States of the fourth, fifth, sixth, or seventh grades, under allotments of the Secretary of Labor and plans developed and administered by State health agencies and approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, $1,200,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will have to make a point of order that the amendment is not germane at this point in the bill. It comes under the Department of Labor.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I would be perfectly willing to withhold the offering of the amendment and offer it at the Department of Labor item in the bill if the gentleman will indicate to me just where that point is.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It would come to the section of the bill devoted to the Department of Labor, page 18.

Mr. KEEFE. I have no objection then to redrafting it so that it may be inserted on page 18 or on page 19 at the end of the provision having to do with the Department of Labor.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I take it for granted that the gentleman will offer it at the place in the bill to which it is germane.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes. I have no objection to doing that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] withdraws the amendment for the time being.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct an inquiry to the chairman of the committee.

On page 7, line 20 of this bill, under the heading "Public Health Service" we find this language:

Commissioned officers, pay, and so forth.

May I ask the chairman of the committee if that phrase "and so forth" is used extensively in appropriation bills? It is not clear to me just what it does mean.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The phrase is standardized and is frequently used in appropriation bills. It refers to the various allowances which go with the maintenance of such an office. It is used in order to save time and space in the bill. It is a familiar term and its significance is understood by the officials of the department and by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. CANFIELD. My only additional comment is that it seems to me we should be a little more explicit; $135,000 is a sizable sum and should be fairly described.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time in order to make certain comments about the bill, which have to do, I am sure, with the section under consideration.

I have here a newspaper clipping from last night's Washington News, from which I should like to read a couple of paragraphs. This article has to do with juvenile delinquency, one of the most important problems we face today. The first paragraph I shall read is as follows:

Major part of the delinquency increase since the war is not due to war tension and disrupted home. It is due, Dr. Winsor charged, to the way pressure groups and taxpayers' associations have used, or abused, the idea of war economy to cut public funds for services to meet delinquency problems held over from before Pearl Harbor as well as those arising since then.

The second portion I should like to read is this:

When fathers go off to war and mothers go into war industry and family incomes are reduced, we should see a strengthening, not a weakening, of school and recreational facilities, welfare and probation departments, to fill the gaps in caring for growing children. The delinquent child who gets only perfunctory, inadequate treatment from juvenile aid and probation services, who is referred to an institution but cannot be admitted because there is no room, not only fails to get adequate treatment but is confirmed in his delinquent ways by learning that nothing will happen if he continues to play truant from school or engage in harmful gang activities, it was said.

As a person who has spent a good deal of his life as a school teacher, this is a problem in which I am profoundly interested. The committee in this bill saw fit not to include any funds for the care of the children of mothers who are at work in defense industries or elsewhere. I agree with the committee's opinion as expressed in their report, that this is primarily a matter where local responsibility should be exercised to the greatest possible extent. Certainly, I do not think the Federal Government ought to run such programs. I do think there are instances where the local people, having developed an adequate program for taking care of this problem, may need Federal financial assistance. And where the local people show a need of such financial aid to carry on their program, I think we should give it to them, for this matter of giving children the best possible chance of a healthy adjustment in their formative years is one that just will not wait and which must not be neglected.

I do not believe it is desirable, if it can possibly be avoided, for mothers of children to leave their homes to go to work anywhere. I realize there are a great many mothers who must work for financial reasons and cannot help it, but surely the most important contribution any woman can make is the training of her own family and the rearing of American children.

This problem of care of children, then, is one that should be met first by doing everything possible to encourage and to make possible their mothers staying with their first and biggest job. But the fact is that today many children are not getting the care they require because their mothers are for one reason or another at work. I heartily agree that the localities should take primary responsibility. The method of providing care, recreation, and constructive activities must be then worked out in the communities by the local people. But on the purely financial side, it is my opinion that there will be a number of instances where Federal aid will be desirable and necessary to enable the local people to carry out their own programs.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. What does the gentleman think of the situation in which the mother of the family, when the father has not gone to war, is employed in a war industry, when that mother also goes into the war industry, probably in part for the lure of the money that can be made?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think she is taking a step down from the best and most important contribution she can make.

Mr. HINSHAW. I agree entirely with the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman feel that before we bring a program in here providing funds for any such purpose the agency asking the funds should come before us with a proper explanation of what they intend to use the money for so that we can know something about what we are doing?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; I agree with the gentleman about that. I would say further that I think the committee would act properly in being very careful to see that the control of such programs is in the hands of local people who have really developed them and built them up. All I want is that there be available the possibility of Federal financial aid where it is necessary.

May I say a word about another phase of this problem, another item for which the committee did not allow funds, and that is the item upon which the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin has bearing, for here, in the case of the necessity for maternity care of servicemen's wives and their babies when they come into the world, there is a Federal responsibility very definite and clear. Here again I understand the committee rejected the appropriation for the reason that they felt it was not authorized in law and wanted further consideration of it, but it is clear to me that where the father of this baby has gone to war and where his wife who bears a child in his absence, while he is fighting for this country, needs maternity care, it certainly is a responsibility of the Federal Government to see that she gets this medical care and attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to point out that under the Selective Service Act as it has been drawn and under the regulations which have been promulgated under it we have a situation where in the case of persons who have been married following certain dates and now have children, the men of those families if they are of draft age are not exempt from service. It is not unnatural that such couples should have children. In many instances they have had not only one but two children since the date set out in the regulations. In any event we have that situation. It is our job to think about it and to do something about it. I do not know how you can expect a young mother with her husband drafted and gone to war to live on the allotment that is allowed and take adequate care of one or two children, unless she goes to work. We do not desire her to go to work and leave those children for some day nursery or other institutional care. We want her to take care of her children as they should be taken care of by their mother. I offer that as something to think about, as a question that has arisen under the law, and one that is highly important to the future not only of our country, but of its citizens of 20 years from now.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

Construction fund, United States Maritime Commission: To increase the construction fund established by the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, $4,000,000,000: Provided, That the amount of contract authorizations contained in prior acts for ship construction and facilities incident thereto is hereby increased by $5,250,000,000 (toward which $3,076,280,455 is included in the amount appropriated herein): Provided further, That without regard to the limitations imposed thereon in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1943, the Commission is hereby authorized to incur obligations for administrative expenses, including the objects specified in such Appropriation Act, during the fiscal year 1943, of not to exceed $16,625,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Page 11, at the end of line 10, insert "Provided, That no ship owned by the United States shall be disposed of under act of March 11, 1941 (Public Law 11), as amended, except by lease."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is self-explanatory. It merely provides that upon the cessation of war activities title to these ships shall remain in the United States, and that includes naval as well as merchant vessels. It is offered here in conformity with the policy already adopted and as set forth in the provisions of the amended act.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. As I heard the amendment read, there was no restriction as to the length of the term of the lease. On other legislation we have a limit of 6 months after the conclusion of the war for the termination of the lease.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Lend-Lease Act itself takes care of that. It provides a period of termination, and any limitation here should coincide with the period provided by the Lend-Lease Act.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that perhaps there is something in what the gentleman from Minnesota calls attention to, and that perhaps the language of the Cannon amendment might be amended by adding that the lease under the Lend-Lease Act must expire 6 months after the termination of the war.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I have no objection to such a provision and would accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MAAS. I think something should be provided in law that the lease shall terminate with the termination of the war. We should not be providing ships to foreign nations with which they could compete with ours even for 6 months after the war. I would like to see the amendment provide for the termination of the lease with the termination of the war.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Strike out the period in the amendment and insert "which must end 6 months after the conclusion of peace."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 11, line 4, insert "Provided, further, That no funds appropriated under this act or heretofore or hereafter appropriated under this heading, shall be available for the construction or acquisition and conversion of any vessels for use as a naval auxiliary, except on a reimbursable basis from funds appropriated to the Navy Department, pursuant to an act authorizing the construction or acquisition and conversion of auxiliary vessels for the Navy Department."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order, or, if the gentleman desires to debate the amendment I shall be glad to reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I join in the making of the point of order and its reservation.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter, and I shall state to the Committee how it happened, how it arose. In January the Navy Department submitted to the Budget in the usual method required by the Department for clearance, a bill to authorize the construction of a million tons of auxiliary. Bear in mind that from the beginning of time down to date the Navy has always controlled what is known in the Navy as the auxiliary shipping bills. For instance, in 1941 and 1942 we authorized 2,500,000 tons of auxiliaries. In the past that authorization has been brought before the House in a separate bill from the Naval Affairs Committee, and when it becomes law, then we go to the Committee on Appropriations to get the money to carry out the authorization. When the Navy Department in January desired to build a million tons of auxiliary, what happened? The naval budget officer from the Navy, on January 13 went before the general Budget officials and they said this:

They state that they were already giving to the Maritime Commission, Admiral Land, sufficient money to finance the building of the merchant ships which can be built according to the types which we call naval auxiliary tonnage. In addition to that, they have given and propose to continue to give the War Shipping Administration, also Admiral Land, plenty of money to convert many of the ships for Army or Navy use. The paper today states a request for $4,000,000,000 before Congress for the Maritime Commission.

Here it is in the bill. Now, what does that mean? It means that if the construction of the auxiliaries for the Navy, which are composed of tankers, supply ships, repair ships, and other ships that are armed but do not carry armament, they propose by the set-up that is now being worked out with the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration, to give to the Navy its auxiliaries. Now, I am opposed to the War Shipping Administration or the Maritime Commission taking the place of Congress. In other words, what is under way now is to circumvent Congress in making the authorization, the Naval Affairs Committee in presenting it to the House, and the Naval Appropriations Committee from making the appropiration. We have no objection to the Maritime Commission acting as the agent of the Navy to construct any of its auxiliaries, but we do propose to enter a vigorous protest against the Navy Department becoming the pensioner of the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration.

Now, what is going to happen? The Navy says, "We need a million tons of auxiliaries." The Maritime Commission comes in here and gets $4,000,000,000 to build ships. It will say to the Navy, "There are certain other demands that must be met out of this pool and therefore you may not be able to get what you want." Now, who is going to run the Navy, the War Shipping Administration, the Maritime Commission, or will the Navy run itself? Congress should have a voice in the matter. You are sitting here today and permitting to happen that which we are all opposed to, that is, losing control over what goes into the Navy and what dispositions are made of the ships that are being built by the Navy. I say it is a very important matter. It is a serious matter. The Naval Affairs Committee the other day authorized a billion tons of ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, I am frank to admit that the amendment is legislation, but I want to say it comes with poor grace on the part of the Appropriations Committee to make a point of order against this amendment, because the very genesis of this was legislation in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman would feel that the Navy should take charge of building every cargo ship that goes along in a convoy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all; but I do say that the Navy should control its auxiliaries and not turn it over to the War Shipping Administration or to the Maritime Commission. By what you are doing here, see what happens now. The Budget is refusing to clear a bill for a million tons of auxiliaries, but you tell them to get it out of the pool of the Maritime Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has again expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]. Of course, the Chairman understands we reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I am hoping that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] will withdraw the point of order against this amendment. The Naval Affairs Committee has gone into this matter very carefully and has unanimously voted to offer this amendment to this appropriation bill.

We find ourselves in a very peculiar situation, where the Naval Affairs Committee, charged by the House with the responsibility of bringing before it legislation for the composition of the Navy, is losing control, losing even the right to get information about the size of the Navy. We will not know what the composition of the Navy will be. We will not know what we ought to authorize, because we will not know what they are going to get through the Maritime Commission. They are going to build ships for the Navy. Thereafter ships will be built for the Navy that will never have been approved by the Naval Affairs Committee, nor authorized by the Congress. We are not going to know what we ought to authorize hereafter, because we will not know what they will have or what they may or may not need.

Further, I point out to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in the category of auxiliaries they are now including escort carriers which, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, cannot be interpreted as auxiliaries. An escort carrier is a combatant vessel. We fly airplanes from it. Naval personnel—not contract labor, but naval aviators have to operate off of those carriers. The only possible interpretation of it being an auxiliary is that it escorts convoys, but it is a naval combatant vessel.

The Navy Department no longer has control over the design or the construction; it cannot even inspect these vessels, and I want to point out that after they are built it requires considerable alteration by the Navy after the Maritime Commission has built them. We do not object to the Maritime Commission's building them; we are merely asking that they act as the contract agents for the Navy, and this amendment merely provides that the Navy shall design, or shall have the final say at least on the design and on the construction and shall have some supervisory inspection service over these ships so that they shall be built for the purpose to which they are to be put in operation by the Navy.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Does not this amendment, in effect, allow the Maritime Commission to interfere in what may be a matter of naval strategy?

Mr. MAAS. The proposed situation without our amendment certainly does. Heretofore the policy has always been that military people must decide military strategy. Now you are setting up a civilian agency that sets itself over and above the military, because military strategy is dependent upon the equipment and the ships and the transports that we need to carry that strategy out. Thus, you are giving to a civilian agency the power of vetoing military strategy.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. HESS. Under this set-up, would it not be possible for the Maritime Commission, which is constructing these carriers, to turn them over to foreign nations under lend-lease?

Mr. MASS. It would. The gentleman from Missouri has offered an amendment permitting them to lease but not to transfer to our other allies; but here the Navy is told that it cannot go before the Naval Affairs Committee and ask for tonnage because it must get them from the Maritime Commission, and the Maritime Commission may say, "We are sorry; we have decided to give this to one of the United Nations under lease-lend." The Navy finds itself unable to carry out its strategy because it does not control the shipping program.

I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would completely disorganize our ship construction program; it would stop the building of ships already on the ways; it would cancel contracts requiring months to negotiate; it would throw a destructive monkey wrench into smooth-running machinery; it would delay immeasurably our war construction program.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, permission to include in the RECORD a statement submitted to the Committee on Appropriations by Admiral Land at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The memorandum is particularly pertinent and should have the careful consideration of all who are interested in expediting an efficient construction program. Under the leave granted it is included as follows:

RE: PROPOSAL TO PLACE MARITIME CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS FOR USE AS AUXILIARIES ON A REIMBURSABLE BASIS

The present construction program of the Maritime Commission including some military and naval auxiliary construction has been carefully worked out under Presidential direction, on a maximum basis to make the most effective use of steel and other materials, ship-construction facilities, and manpower in the yards, the offices and in governmental agencies.

This is primarily true with the idea of utilizing the best shipbuilding brains in the country, always considering the brains available and the ability to produce.

The agreements and arrangements between the Maritime Commission and the other agencies worked out in the line with the program of the President cannot be disarranged without slowing down the war construction program and without a needless slowing down of the use of war manpower.

The attitude of all the agencies in the past has been to avoid any activity of an unnecessary nature in the coordination of the construction program both of strictly merchant vessels and vessels capable of use as naval or military auxiliaries, or expressly designed as such.

The proposed amendment would upset the whole accounting arrangement worked out under the President's program not only as to future construction, but as to construction heretofore constructed, acquired, or converted for naval or military use. It would throw out of pattern the appropriations made and to be made for merchant vessel construction, including certain vessels for naval or military use.

Any modification will seriously disarrange the close working cooperation now existing between the Navy Department and the United States Maritime Commission with particular reference to new construction, as it affects the all-out war effort.

The amendment would require a specific additional authorization for such construction by the Maritime Commission and involve, even if such construction should be continued by the Maritime Commission in line with the present over-all ship-construction program, a tremendous duplication of supervisory manpower as well as much dislocation of arrangements for allocation of vessels, not only shipways but shipyard labor supervision, both by the contractors and by the Government.

The job is to build the ships to help win the war. The ultimate control or permanent provision of vessels specifically designed for auxiliary use will be worked out in line with the President's program. For the present the ship-construction program and the utilization program must be kept on a coordinated, unified basis in order to make the most effective use of the available construction facilities and available tonnage in meeting necessities of the war effort.

The proposed amendment is legislation in that it retroactively amends the Merchant Marine Act, 1936. The Commission's construction fund is created by that act. That act expressly provides that vessels constructed under it must be of such design that the vessel may be suitable for economical and speedy conversion into a naval or military auxiliary, or otherwise suitable for the use of the United States Government in time of war or national emergency (see sec. 501 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936). The proposed amendment would amend and, in fact, render ineffective the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, by requiring an appropriation and a specific authorization before any vessel suitable for use as a naval auxiliary could be constructed with funds in the construction fund of the Maritime Commission. It would render illegal action lawfully taken under existing law. Construction under existing contracts would have to be stopped.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is it not true that the construction program which the Maritime Commission has now entered upon and which this bill implements by giving them funds to carry out the construction program upon which they are engaged and which is under the direction of the President of the United States after conference with the Navy Department? It certainly is a ridiculous and violent assumption to say that the Maritime Commission, whose one object is to build ships, cargo ships, or any other kind of ships to help win the war, would not turn over to the Navy whatever ought to be turned over to the Navy. I think we are exaggerating far beyond its importance something that would not possibly occur.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does the gentleman think the Navy should be required to get its tonnage for auxiliaries from the War Shipping Administration? Or should it get it from Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the Navy should get it from Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All right; but it is not getting it from Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Let me say this to my friend, my distinguished friend, my able friend, who is chairman of the great committee that gets anything it wants to have because they are usually reasonable when they ask for something in this House, that if there is any division about this, the way to do it is for my friend to bring something here from his great committee and let the Congress, after recommendations for or against by the President, act upon it. What we are doing here is exactly what the Navy has asked to be done.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All that we are asking in this matter of auxiliary shipping, all that the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy Department is asking be done, is that the Congress control their affairs, and not the Maritime Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Then does not my friend think the Secretary of the Navy and the President ought to get together?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, I think they are together.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They are not, because this is the recommendation of the Maritime Commission carrying out a program agreed upon under the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, in this program the Kaiser ships have been agreed upon.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the proper remedy is for the gentleman and his great committee to bring in a bill to authorize the procedur he recommends, rather than attempt it by way of amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to insist on the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I shall concede the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman concedes the point of order, I wish to emphasize the fact that the relations between the gentleman and myself in the conduct of our committees have been very cordial, and I do not want my appearance in objecting to this amendment or raising a point of order against it to be taken as an objection to the essential principles that are involved in the gentleman's amendment. I am in sympathy with the objections sought by the amendment, but I make the point of order, because I do not think that this deficiency bill is the proper place to secure those objections, for it would possibly tie up construction under existing legislation for the Maritime Commission. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's objectives.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I say to both the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Missouri that this does not interfere at all with any construction program of the Maritime Commission. It merely gives back to the Congress control of the auxiliary of the Navy. What is happening? It goes from the Congress under blanket authorization to the War Shipping Administration and to the Maritime Commission. If you want to control these things, let it go as it has been in the past. We want the Maritime Commission to construct the ships. They are building the ships for us today involving a hundred million dollars. We have no quarrel there, but we do say that Congress should say what constitutes a navy. The Constitution put the responsibility upon the Congress to provide and maintain a navy, not the Maritime Commission and not the Shipping Administration.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] or the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] desire to be heard further?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 11, line 4, before the word "Provided", insert the following: "Provided further, That no funds appropriated under this act shall be available for the construction or acquisition and conversion of any vessel for use as a naval auxiliary which is not constructed or acquired and converted on a reimbursable basis from funds appropriated to the Navy Department pursuant to an act authorizing the construction or acquisition and conversion of auxiliary vessels for the Navy Department, and."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amendment is not legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All time of debate has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is on the point of order. I submit this is not legislation on an appropriation bill. It is a limitation on the money to be used in the construction of certain types of ships.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I speak very briefly on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill provides money for the construction of ships by the Maritime Commission. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, it simply limits those funds as to the type of ships for which the funds might be used and is, therefore, very definitely a limitation on the appropriation itself and not legislation.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard briefly?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the beginning of the section is that the appropriation is made to increase the construction fund established by the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and any amendment such as proposed by the gentleman effects an amendment to the Merchant Marine Act, 1936. If legislation is brought in to accomplish the purpose which the gentleman desires, I have no objection, but I am unable and he is unable to say what effect it will have upon the fund that is provided for the work now in progress. But whether that is true or not, it would be an amendment to the construction fund provided by the Merchant Marine Act.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, here is an authorization for the Maritime Commission to build ships, any kind of ships. We put a limitation on it and say they cannot build a certain type of ship. That certainly is not legislation. It is a limitation. That is the whole point.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. All debate has been closed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The debate had not closed on the section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first dispose of the point of order.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] raises a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] on the ground it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have withdrawn the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] provides for a limitation upon the appropriation contained in this bill. Therein it differs from the last amendment offered.

The gentleman from Missouri raises the point of order that the amendment is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The Chair thinks that clearly this is merely a limitation upon an appropriation, therefore overrules the point of order.

Under the unanimous agreement, all debate on this paragraph of the bill was confined to 10 minutes, which time has expired; therefore no further debate is permissible on this amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 81, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 10, line 24, strike out "$4,000,000,000" and insert "$3,772,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to take out the money that would be required for the 36 aircraft carriers that would have to be built some other way and not out of this appropriation, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 46, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY AND PLANT QUARANTINE

Control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and plant diseases: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of and for expenditures authorized by the joint resolution approved May 9, 1938 (7 U. S. C. 148-148e), including surveys and control operations in Canada in cooperation with the Canadian Government or local Canadian authorities, and the employment of Canadian citizens, fiscal year 1943, $3,500,000, to remain available until June 30, 1944.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, realizing the sentiment of the House with reference to increasing any appropriations provided in the bill by the committee, I am not going to offer an amendment to increase this appropriation from $3,500,000 to the amount requested by the President through the Bureau of the Budget. The Budget asks for $3,944,000. This was cut to $3,500,000 by the committee.

On the 1st of January a meeting was held in Denver of the State officials having to do with insect and grasshopper control. At that meeting it was decided that it was necessary in view of the conditions that at least the sum of $4,250,000 should be provided. Later the Budget submitted a request for $3,944,000. These funds are used for the control of several insects but the one in which we are the most interested is the grasshopper. Approximately 12,900 tons of bait are estimated as necessary for the Western States infested with this pest. Montana needs the greatest amount of bait material, 2,075 tons; Nebraska comes second with an estimate of 1,280; Texas third, with 1,250; and the others fall in line below that mark.

The States that are interested in this item are Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, and Washington.

I want to make this record, Mr. Chairman, so when the matter comes before the Senate Committee on Appropriations they will be apprised of the necessity for an increase of this amount.

Last year there was appropriated the full amount asked by the Budget, $3,950,000. That was cut this year; yet last year was a good year for production, and with a very successful campaign of control, still 5 percent of the crops in these Western States was destroyed by the insects, principally by grasshoppers.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I did not hear the gentleman mention the State of Arizona as being one also afflicted by grasshoppers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. MURDOCK. I assure the gentleman it is one of the Western States that is so afflicted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is one of the vital States that is so affected. I am sorry I omitted the gentleman's State and hurry to assure the gentleman it was not intentional. I do not want to criticize the committee for I know they are trying to cut down on every nonessential item, as they term it, but the production of food is just as essential today as any other factor vital to our military effort. I am not going to offer an amendment, because I feel confident the committee would have to oppose it and defend the bill, and I feel that the House consequently would probably vote down the amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I hope the gentleman has recognized that in the language of this bill there is a provision that allows the Federal Government to work on range lands this year. This is the first time it has been done. I think this is of great benefit to the gentleman's State.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is very true. This is what happens. As a rule the grasshoppers infest the range land and then later when the grass becomes not so good they get over into the crops and destroy the crops. The importance of protecting essential food and fiber crops from the threatening populations of grasshoppers and the scarcity of labor for the coming crop season no doubt prompted the Department to request funds to extend its part of the cooperative effort to combat grasshopper control somewhat beyond the practice followed in preceding years. The estimate submitted contemplated the procurement and transportation of bait materials to distribution centers where they will be available to farmers for use in protecting cultivated crops. Approximately 12,900 tons of bait will be needed to apply control on somewhat more than 2,000,000 acres of croplands. In addition to this the estimate contemplated the purchase and application of approximately 14,800 tons of bait to an additional 3,900,000 acres through the use of trained assistants working under supervision and using equipment furnished by the Government.

The heavy infestations that may occur on range lands will also destroy large quantities of valuable forage needed for food of livestock. The control of grasshoppers on range and idle lands is, therefore, of special importance in connection with the production of food needed because of the war effort.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for payment of interest on moneys held in trust for the several Indian tribes, as authorized by various acts of Congress, fiscal year 1942, $35,000.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us a deficiency bill. I am not rising to make any effort to have reintroduced into it any of the funds that have been taken out, but I do rise to bring to your attention something of vital moment to the Nation and to the future of our country, which is larger than the Nation.

We are finding on every hand that our homes are being endangered. Our men are with the forces and intensively on the production lines. Our women are being called upon to take an increasingly active part in the war program. The cross purposes at which we are working in so many of our war efforts mean that one group pulls people out and the other group tries to put them in. I assert very, very feelingly today the hope that this Congress will take into consideration a fundamental principle of the future, which is the children, and their homes. Without adequate maternity care, without proper environment, without the protection of the home itself, we are going to lose our virility, we are going to lose everything for which this entire holocaust is taking place.

Those of us who work in the field of social hygiene know that the increase of venereal diseases among children down to the age of 5 years is shocking beyond measure. Why? Because in so many instances the mothers and the fathers are out of the home and no one is responsible. England has found that it is uneconomic to have the children below certain ages brought into nurseries; perhaps we will find the same thing. But let us find ways to protect our mothers and through them the children now. Let us find ways to make it possible for the mothers of children, say under 12 years of age, to be constrained to stay at home. On one hand many people are trying to do this, but on the other hand our terrible need for production is drawing these women out. The young women of the world are the future of the world, and their children must be protected in every possible way. So I would urge you, even as I charge myself, to be exceedingly watchful in the Committee on Appropriations, and in every committee on which we sit. Let us be careful lest in our endeavor to be more careful of money, we be less careful of life, less careful of health, less careful of the right of the children to be physically well born, with adequate mental capacity to be constructive citizens, with such opportunity as can be given only through an adequate home whose influences are those of emotional security.

Have you any conception of what it is to a child to find home insecure, mother not there, daddy not there? The child wonders what has happened, and fears that perhaps they do not care so much as they used to care, and feels lost—responsible to no one, often with serious consequence.

We must not permit the war, terrible as its needs are, to make us forget that the peace needs are going to be even greater. Can you imagine a time in which it could be more important to have people of good physical strength and vitality, clear minds, trained emotions, and God-fearing spirits than in that time which is coming after this war—the time we call peace, the time for building the new world? What are we building a new world for? Are we building a new world for social and moral cripples, physical cripples, or are we going to protect it from those admissions of our failure to be true to the great laws of life?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics (national defense): For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics (national defense), fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1943, $12,300.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: On page 19, line 3, after the period, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"CHILDREN'S BUREAU

"Grants to States for emergency maternity and infant care: For grants to States, including Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia, to provide, in addition to similar services otherwise available, medical, nursing, and hospital maternity and infant care for wives and infants of enlisted men in the armed forces of the United States of the fourth, fifth, sixth, or seventh grades, under allotments by the Secretary of Labor and plans developed and administered by State health agencies and approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, $1,200,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I make the point of order that the amendment is not authorized by law.

Mr. KEEFE. I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I should be very glad to withhold the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the point of order.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, the first necessity of childhood is provision for safe arrival into the world. A year ago it became apparent that many young women, wives of men in the armed services, often living away from home and expecting their first babies, would not be able to obtain good maternity care throughout the prenatal period and at the time of childbirth, unless public maternal and child-health services could be provided when good care was not otherwise available. Many of the wives living near army posts are nonresidents and, therefore, not eligible for certain community services. Private funds have been made available for emergency care for a number of these women, or more often for the cost of sending them back from the camps to their home towns, but often it is not feasible for the wife to go elsewhere. As the number of cases increase, private funds have proved to be insufficient to meet the need of medical and hospital care. The Army has been forced to discontinue in many areas the provision of medical or hospital care for wives and children of service men which it usually provides during peacetime. American Red Cross officials have indicated the inability of their chapters to meet the need. Neither the Red Cross, the Army Emergency Relief, nor the Navy Relief Society have the organization to carry out a program of maternity care of the size indicated. The State health departments already have the administrative organization to undertake such a program in their maternal and child-health divisions and local public health services.

Red Cross representatives at 240 Army posts reported that in the one month from July 15 to August 15, 1942, 3,262 soldiers requested help in securing maternity care for their wives; 39 percent of these requests were for assistance in obtaining care for wives living near the army posts, and 61 percent were requests for assistance in obtaining care of wives living in another State.

The problem of maternity care exists not only near the camps but also in many home communities where wives and children of service men are living and where public provision for maternity care or medical care of children is not available or is inadequate. The American Red Cross reports that 2,601 requests from soldiers' and sailors' wives for help in obtaining maternity care or care for their sick children were received in the month of August 1942 in a 10-percent cross-section of chapters in 46 States.

Dependents' allowances for privates and the lower grades of noncommissioned officers are not sufficient unless the families have other income to provide for the costs of maternity care and care of sick children, which amount to at least $70 and $80 per case for maternity care and at least $20 or $30 for medical care of the baby during the first year of life.

At the request of the State health officers, the Children's Bureau has made special allotments during the current year from maternal and child health funds available under the Social Security Act for grants to State health agencies. Altogether $390,177 has been made available to meet the need for medical, nursing, and hospital maternity and infant care. At the beginning of the program 38 State health departments indicated that a total of $544,900 would be needed. Twenty-eight States are now carrying on these programs under plans approved by the Children's Bureau, most of them not getting under way until the second quarter of this fiscal year. Physicians attending women eligible for care may state in the application for care whether hospital care is needed, and if so, authorization may be given by the State health agency. Proof of financial need is not required, but it must be shown that similar care is not otherwise available. The State plans set up rates of payment to physicians and hospitals and to agencies providing visiting-nurse care.

Experience during the past 5 months shows that the demand for this service is very great; the sums available have not been sufficient to enable some States to accept all the cases for which application has been made. One State, for example, in December 1942 had a waiting list of 300, and another a waiting list of 400.

On February 3, 1943, the President transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Children's Bureau for the fiscal year 1943 in the amount of $1,200,000 for grants to States for the payment of maternity care and infant care for the wives and infants of the men in the armed forces of the fourth, fifth, sixth, or seventh grades—grades carrying monthly base pay of $78 or under. The grants are to be made in accordance with plans developed and administered by State health agencies and approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau. The pending amendment would restore this amount to the present bill. I fully realize that the amendment offered is subject to the point of order that the amount requested is in excess of the amount authorized by the maternal and child-welfare sections of the Social Security Act. We were in hopes that the point of order would not be raised. The problem is here. It is critical and should prompt the proper legislative committee to act at once in bringing in legislation that will give proper legislative authority for this appropriation.

The following questions and answers and the following letters answer many questions in relation to this amendment:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING PROPOSAL FOR AN APPROPRIATION FOR GRANTS TO STATES FOR EMERGENCY MATERNITY AND INFANT CARE

(For more detailed information see hearings, pp. 317-329)

1. Is there legislative authority for the appropriation?

There is certainly a basis for work of this kind in title V, part 1, of the Social Security Act—in fact there is full authority as to everything except the amount of appropriation authorized. This title, section 501, authorizes appropriations "for the purpose of enabling each State to extend and improve, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, services for promoting the health of mothers and children." The methods of administration which would be followed with respect to the new funds would be in accordance with procedures, policies, and regulations relating to maternal and child-health programs under the Social Security Act. Limited programs of the kind proposed are already in operation under these provisions, and the new money would merely provide for an extension of these programs.

2. Why is the proposal intended to benefit only the enlisted men of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh pay ratings of the armed services?

Because these are the men whose pay rates are so low that they are unable to provide these services for their wives and children. These are also the grades covered by legislation providing allotments and allowances to dependents of men in the armed forces. Enlisted men in the first, second, and third grade are entitled to quarters or monthly allowances for quarters for dependents. (At present approximately $38.)

3. What is the basis of eligibility for care?

Eligibility is determined by the State health agency on the basis of an application from the physician to whom the woman applies for care, stating that maternity care or medical care for infants and health supervision for such infants is needed. No test of financial need is required but care will not be approved if similar services are otherwise available (through facilities provided by the Army, Navy, State, and local health agencies or other local authorities).

4. How are funds to be allotted?

Allotments to States will be made by the Secretary of Labor on the basis of the financial need of each State for carrying out its plan, taking into consideration the number of children born in the State whose fathers are in the armed forces of the United States, the extent to which there are unusually large concentration of troops in the State, and the experience of the State as to applications for care. (See information on numbers of births whose fathers are in the military service, attached.)

5. What requirements will the Children's Bureau require to be incorporated in the plan submitted by the State health agency before such plan can be approved?

a. That costs of State and local administration will be provided from existing funds or new funds provided by States or localities, without recourse to the funds provided by the new appropriation.

b. That care will be available only when the father is an enlisted man of the specified grades in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard.

c. That the requirements of section 503 (a), subsections 2 to 4 and 6, are met. (These requirements provide for administration of the plan or supervision of the administration of the plan by the State health agency; such methods of administration as are necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the plan; such reports as may be required by the Secretary of Labor; and provision for cooperation with medical, nursing, welfare groups and organizations.)

6. What provision will be made with reference to costs per case?

The State plan will provide for maximum rates for care of certain types and for agreements with hospitals made by the State health agency in accordance with procedures outlined in the regulations. Costs of hospital care will be calculated on basis of per diem ward costs.

7. What will be the annual cost?

The amount of $1,200,000 will provide for about 15,000 cases in 1 quarter, or about two-fifths of the births expected to men in the armed forces during that quarter. The total annual cost would range from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 and would cover from a third to a half of the cases. Costs are estimated as averaging $75 for maternity cases and $20 for health supervision and medical care of infants during 1 year. There will, of course, be considerable variation in cost per case depending on whether hospital care is required and other factors.

8. How many States are now cooperating in a program of this kind?

Money was set aside under maternal and child-health funds for 29 States. Plans for 27 States had been approved at the time of the hearing. (See p. 328.) An additional plan has since been approved. The list of States as given in table 1, page 328, is correct as of today as to States with approved plans, with the exception of Virginia, which has withdrawn its affiliation for the time being. Funds have been exhausted in a number of States (9 States as of the date of the hearing).

9. What is the extent of the need?

The extent of the need is shown on page 325 of the hearings. It is important to note that the Army and Navy formerly provided medical and hospital care for dependents of service men without regard to financial need. The Army has been forced to discontinue in many areas the provision of such care which it usually provides during peacetime. American Red Cross officials have indicated the inability of their chapters to meet the need. Colonel Myer, of the Army Emergency Relief, wrote the Children's Bureau in August that "none except emergency cases are included in which we give assistance." On December 8 a letter from the Army Air Forces Branch, District of Columbia Division of the Army Emergency Relief, signed by Lavinia H. Van Nostrand for the first vice president, stated: "I am so interested in this program because in our Army Emergency Relief, Air Forces Branch, we have many calls for assistance fron prospective mothers. There just isn't any provision made for them in our relief program."

As stated in the hearings, Red Cross representatives at 240 Army posts reported that in the 1 month from July 15 to August 15, 1942, 3,262 soldiers requested help in securing maternity care for their wives; 39 percent of these requests were for assistance in obtaining care for wives living near the Army post, and 61 percent were requests for assistance in obtaining care of wives living in another State.

The problem of maternity care exists not only near the camps but also in many home communities where wives and children of service men are living and where public provision for maternity care or medical care of children is not available or is inadequate. The American Red Cross reports that 2,601 requests from soldiers' and sailors' wives for help in obtaining maternity care or care for their sick children were received in the month of August 1942 in a 10-percent cross-section of chapters in 46 States.

In a letter dated August 25, 1942, from the Salinas Valley Chapter, Salinas, Calif., of the American Red Cross, the following statement is made:

"It so happens that within the past 2 weeks the situation has grown out of bounds, due to the increase of Army population and also to the fact that this is the time when we might rightfully expect an increase of babies.

"The Army hospital at the Presidio of Monterey has taken these women for prenatal care and for delivery until 2 weeks ago, when this service had to be discontinued. This left the Salinas Valley Chapter with about 50 expectant mothers with no arrangement for prenatal or maternity care.

"We, of course, are trying to work this out with the county health officers. For the time being, the presidio is continuing its prenatal clinic. At the last clinic session our women left home at 7:45 in the morning and returned to Salinas, a distance of 20 miles, about 2:30 in the afternoon, having had no lunch. Only one physician was available."

The following case has been reported by the State Health Department of Wisconsin:

"Corporal X, extremely worried and concerned, appeared at the health department, sent by the Sisters at St. —— Hospital, where his wife had been confined 2 days before. The Sisters had asked him about meeting the hospital charges and he had had to tell them that he had absolutely no funds. The couple had come from the Dakotas and this was their first baby. Shortly before confinement, Mrs. X had a short hospitalization and Corporal X was paying on these charges. They lived in an old apartment house in a poor part of town and shared both kitchen and bathroom with neighbors. The income was $94 monthly, of which $35 went for rent, $7 for military insurance, $2.50 for bonds (deducted), $2.50 camp laundry (deducted), $25 for food, and a few dollars a week on the old hospital bill. The couple had been unable to provide anything for the baby, and all that was in readiness were some things the landlady and neighbors had sewed for it. The physician at the Army camp had given prenatal care, but was unwilling to sign an application for hospital care at health department expense, as he thought free services should be only for the destitute; therefore, the health department felt it could do nothing further."

SAFEGUARDING THE HEALTH OF MOTHERS AND CHILDREN

MATERNITY CARE FOR WIVES OF MEN IN MILITARY SERVICE

State plans approved

By October 1942 State and territorial health departments had requested from the Children's Bureau funds amounting to more than $1,500,000 to provide obstetric and pediatric medical care and hospital care for the families of men in military service. Plans had been received from 25 States and Hawaii and most of these had been approved and were in operation: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washingto Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Funds totaling $308,000 have been allotted to these States to meet immediate needs. No further funds can be allotted to these States from current Fund B appropriations. Appropriation of additional funds depends on the passage of bills now in Congress.

In several of the States the services are made available on a State-wide basis; in others they are limited to the most critical areas surrounding military posts. Some of the plans provide only maternity care; others include care for sick children under 1 year of age.

Percentage of newborn babies whose fathers are in military service

The percentage of all babies born whose fathers are in military service is already substantial and is on the increase. Preliminary figures based on birth certificates filed during May, June, and July 1942 are available for 28 States and the District of Columbia. The following tabulation shows the percentage of these babies whose fathers were stated to be soldiers or sailors:

| State | Total births | Children of men in military service | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | Number | Percent of total |
| Total, 28 States and District of Columbia | 309,357 | 9,176 | 3.0 |
| District of Columbia | 5,089 | 401 | 7.9 |
| Wyoming | 1,419 | 85 | 6.0 |
| Kansas [1] | 8,416 | 460 | 5.5 |
| Rhode Island | 3,428 | 166 | 4.8 |
| Georgia | 13,618 | 642 | 4.7 |
| Maryland | 4,092 | 188 | 4.6 |
| Louisiana | 9,354 | 408 | 4.4 |
| Nebraska | 5,655 | 240 | 4.2 |
| Utah | 3,933 | 166 | 4.2 |
| Oregon | 5,697 | 234 | 4.1 |
| New Mexico | 3,475 | 135 | 3.9 |
| Arizona | 3,076 | 114 | 3.7 |
| Maine | 4,480 | 160 | 3.6 |
| North Carolina | 21,118 | 765 | 3.6 |
| Idaho | 2,981 | 104 | 3.5 |
| Delaware | 1,397 | 43 | 3.1 |
| West Virginia | 9,469 | 282 | 3.0 |
| Illinois | 35,004 | 958 | 2.7 |
| Missouri | 15,681 | 425 | 2.7 |
| Tennessee | 15,750 | 388 | 2.5 |
| Mississippi | 11,870 | 285 | 2.4 |
| Ohio | 33,971 | 812 | 2.4 |
| Indiana | 16,303 | 367 | 2.3 |
| North Dakota [2] | 2,950 | 68 | 2.3 |
| Michigan | 29,987 | 675 | 2.3 |
| Iowa | 11,999 | 265 | 2.2 |
| South Dakota | 3,105 | 66 | 2.1 |
| Vermont | 1,810 | 38 | 2.1 |
| Wisconsin [3] | 23,330 | 236 | 1.0 |

[1] Data for June, July, and August.
[2] July data incomplete.
[3] Figures for 5 months, January–May 1942.

Thus 3 percent of all the babies whose births were registered in these States in May, June, and July 1942 were born to wives of men in military service. In nine States and the District of Columbia the percentage was more than 4. But in the fall of 1941 not only was the total strength of the military force much less than it is now, but the proportion of married men in the services was much smaller.

In 22 States, where it was possible to analyze the figures by months, the percentage rose from an average of 2.7 in May to 3.1 in June and 3.7 in July.

The Children's Bureau has information which indicates that the proportion of married men in the armed forces more than doubled in the short period from December 1941 to April 1942. Indications are that the increase is continuing. On the basis of this information and the figures presented in the table, it may be conservatively estimated that 5 percent of the births in the United States in the year beginning July 1942 will be to wives of men in the armed forces. Since the information available as to the strength of the armed forces in the fall of 1941 and the proportion of married men in them agrees well with the results of the information tabulated from birth certificates, State health officers may find it useful to study birth certificates registered in planning programs for maternity care for soldiers' and sailors' wives.

For children born of unmarried parents whose fathers are in military service the percentage is probably much higher than for all babies. In one State, Michigan, for which information is available, from birth certificates filed during May, June, and July 1942, it appears that 2.3 percent of all babies were stated to have fathers in military service, compared with nearly 10 percent of the children born out of wedlock. This figure, of course, is based on a small sample, but at least it can be taken to indicate that this problem is especially acute.

MATERNITY CARE FOR WIVES OF MEN IN MILITARY SERVICE

Letters and reports have come to the Children's Bureau from 21 States, written by physicians and nurses, as well as health officers, who are administering the programs. The States represented are Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin.

EXCERPTS FROM THESE LETTERS AND REPORTS

From a physician in Olympia, Wash., writing to the State health department:

"In reply to your letter of January 30, 1943, concerning the possibility of having to discontinue the care of maternity cases who are dependents of soldiers.

"I think it rather important that every effort be made to continue this program.

"Last June I made a survey and found the wives of 2,500 enlisted men living in Olympia. Since then two eastern divisions have arrived at Fort Lewis, and this number has increased. This is a potential problem.

"Thurston County has no hospital, and these people are living in furnished rooms, so that hospitalization is necessary either here or as an emergency at Fort Lewis.

"I find that room and board in Olympia at present is about $60 per month, with room alone at $28 per month as a minimum. From this you can readily see that these people have no funds themselves. In fact, the aftercare of these people is becoming a problem where they are living in rooms.

"These wives are a long way from their relatives, in case of one division, the New York and New Jersey, so transporting them home is not practical.

"It might be worth while to contact the Governor and see if the legislature would send a memorial to Congress urging an appropriation.

"If I can be of any assistance, let me know."

And two others from Minnesota—women needing help for themselves:

"DEAR SIR: Am writing you in regards of my confinement that is to be in April. My husband is in Army, a private in Hawaii, and I was told that there is a help in paying for cases of Army wives' confinements. So would like to hear from you in regards to this matter.

"I am staying home, but I have to pay for board and room, and after buying fuel for heating my room, there isn't much left from my checks from War Department. So, please write and let me know all details about this.

"Mrs. M. ———,
"115 W. ——— St., Winona, Minn.
"My doctor is: Dr. ———."

"DEAR SIRS: Through my doctor, I have received information that you help soldiers' wives with hospital expenses.

"I am expecting a baby in less than a month. My husband is a private in the Army and as yet I haven't received my allotment. Being without anything whatsoever for 4 months has made my past expenses quite high. I am staying at home or otherwise I don't know what I would have done.

"My doctor told me that you helped others—soldiers and their wives—in similar cases, who have needed help. If I could but hear further about this I would appreciate it very much.

"It would be such a comfort if I could possibly get aid with this expense.

"Sincerely yours,
"Mrs. H. ———,
"Route 2, Wayzata, Minn."

From a public-health nurse in Boise, Idaho, reporting three cases of wives of servicemen under her care:

"Mrs. H., a young mother of three children, lives with her parents. The husband is stationed in Australia. The husband has not seen the youngest child, who is now 5 months old. The child is suffering from malnutrition. Immediate hospitalization of infant was recommended by the pediatrician and finances were taken care of."

From the chief of social service, Duke University Hospital, Durham, N. C.:

"As you know, quite a number of women have been given maternity care in Duke Hospital under maternal and child health services. Previous to this plan for enlisted men's wives and infants we had an increasing number of nonresident women and infants needing medical care and without sufficient funds to pay for it.

* * * * *

"One girl came from California to Durham because her husband had relatives here and he is stationed at a camp about 100 miles from here. She was quite relieved to be accepted here under the plan because she has a possible heart disease.

"Yesterday, Mrs. X, an 18-year-old white woman, wife of a private at Camp Butner, was admitted as an emergency to Duke Hospital. She is 7 months pregnant and has had some bleeding throughout most of the pregnancy. She and her husband, previous to his induction 4 months ago, were tenant farmers in Alabama. He was drafted before he was able to sell his crop so that they not only did not have any money except for the Army pay and allowance, but also had several debts. When their other baby was born 18 months ago he had 'Doc W., a wonderful doctor—knew him all his life,' deliver her at home and she had come through it all right although she almost had a miscarriage several times. In Durham they had lived in a home where there are several other Army families. She had been to a local physician twice. Private X meant for her to come to the hospital, but didn't know how he was going to pay for her delivery. He felt he should have watched his wife closer, but she never complained. A neighbor and landlord brought her to the clinic. * * * Her husband was surprised when told of this plan for paying for hospitalization and with an obviously relieved expression said 'sure takes a load of worry off my shoulders.' No one had told him about it before and several men in his company are in his same fix. * * *

"A number of infants have also been hospitalized under this plan and much the same relief and appreciation is shown by the parents. Again the living conditions, strain, and tension mothers are under in a new environment will undoubtedly affect the health of babies. This past week a mother and 6-month-old baby arrived at the local bus station after a 3-day bus trip from Missouri. They came to be with the soldier stationed at Camp Butner who had never seen the baby and wanted to before he was sent out. They had no place to live, of course knew nothing about local medical facilities, nor had the money to pay for medical care. The baby was critically ill with pneumonia, was referred to the hospital by the Travelers Aid Service upon arrival at the bus station and immediately admitted to this hospital under the plan."

A nurse in New Jersey reports the following case:

"Mrs. T is a young woman, under 20, married to a private who is stationed elsewhere; living with her mother-in-law. Mrs. T expects a baby in April. She has been receiving prenatal care from a local physician. She has been worried about how she could pay for medical and hospital care at time of delivery since neither she nor her mother-in-law have any independent means. When she learned, through her physician, that the State MCH program would pay for this care, she was overjoyed, since this seemed the solution of her previously insoluble problem. The young woman was frightened about having a baby. Her mother-in-law seemed as much frightened as the girl herself. The public-health nurse understood the girl's anxieties and told her about the type of care she would get, summing it up by saying, 'we will take care of you as though you were our daughter.' This reassurance evidently meant much to the girl and she appeared much calmer and happier."

From South Dakota comes the report of two mothers who had had maternity care under the State health department plan. Both had Caesarian operations:

"Mrs. X's husband is a private in the Army. A normal 7½-pound baby boy was delivered by Caesarian section on December 28. This program made it possible for Mrs. X to have good antepartum, intrapartum, and postpartum service.

"Her parents are of the very low-income group and financial aid was necessary."

"Mrs. S is a primipara, 24 years old and the wife of a private first-class. She lives in a small home with her parents, brother and his family. This home has only two bedrooms and, as a result, the expectant mother had to sleep on a davenport.

"Prenatal care was given by a physician and public-health nurse. The medical and hospital obstetric care program made it possible for Mrs. S to be brought to the hospital 2 weeks prior to delivery. A normal 7-pound male was delivered by Caesarian section."

From Phoenix, Ariz., a nurse reports that previous maternity care in Army hospitals is no longer available. This case illustrates the need for a planned service:

"This case was that of a private's wife who received her prenatal care at Luke Field, expecting to be delivered there until within a week's time of delivery. She was then advised that they were no longer able to care for obstetrical cases. Captain ——— was notified of this and arrangements made by him at St. ——— Hospital, which has accommodations for five cases. This mission is primarily for the colored population but due to the emergency consented to care for the needs of this type of case. Due to their limited accommodations, they were only able to keep this woman 3 days from time of delivery. She was then returned to her home where she is taking care of the baby by herself with the help of her husband. Captain ——— requested the assistance of the city health nurse and both the nurse and doctor have been making frequent calls at the home."

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, every Member of the House can subscribe to the tender and human sentiments expressed by the lovely and gracious gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] and those expressed so forcibly and so well by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]. However, there are definite limits within which the Congress may act when you have a particular measure before you for consideration. This committee is an appropriation committee and not a legislative nor a policy committee. Every committee of this House, policy-making committee, and rightfully so, is extremely jealous of its prerogatives. The Appropriations Committee would be criticized severely if it attempted to legislate on this matter. Speaking as a member of the Appropriations Committee I would be among the first to criticize the action of my own committee if we should attempt to enter into the broad field of legislation and policy making in this House.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Please allow me to finish my remarks and then I will gladly yield.

Under the Children's Bureau we have an authorization for $5,280,000 per year, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] informed you. This sum has already been appropriated for the fiscal year 1943 and the Budget estimate for a like amount is now pending for 1944. But all that is authorized by that act has been appropriated and there is no further authority to appropriate under the act. As a matter of fact, it is not broad enough to do what is here contemplated. It provides for prenatal and postnatal care, but not for obstetrical services or hospitalization in confinement. In other words, there is no legislative authority for the appropriation which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] seeks. Furthermore, there is no policy delineated by the House or the Senate or by the National Assembly with reference to this particular matter. Thus far it has been administered solely by the whims or caprice or by orders or directives of an adminisrative agency of the Federal Government, without the approval of the Congress.

Another weakness of this proposal is that it is not universal in its application to children to be born to the men of the armed services. It selects only the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh pay grades of enlisted men. It does not base the provisions of the aid upon any lack of financial ability. It does not base the appropriation upon any lack of facilities existing in any particular community. I took occasion to call the War Department this morning with reference to this item to find what their interest was in it. There has been no request by the War Department for an appropriation or for action of this sort. I was informed that to the extent of their ability, to the limit of their hospital capacity, at every Army post the facilities of the hospital for maternity cases for wives of officers and enlisted men of all ranks and grades were made available.

In view of these facts, even though the point of order should be overruled, I think the House would be quite unwise in taking this step until there has been careful and deliberate consideration of the whole subject matter and the Congress of the United States has established a policy under which the War Department should operate—I am doubtful as to the wisdom of placing this subject matter under the Department of Labor. I think we are not to be criticized in raising a point of order or justly criticized in voting down this amendment on its merits in this particular case, when you consider all the facts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman help us secure legislation along lines that will be beneficial?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] has expired.

Does the gentleman from Missouri insist upon the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order. I conceded it in my statement to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin concedes the point of order.

The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Domestic Air Mail Service: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1942, for the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, $343,299.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it so happens that I served for 4 years on the welfare committee in the Ohio Legislature and during that time have studied rather extensively a long-range program for underprivileged children. I would like briefly to give to the Members of this House a code of ethics which is in keeping with the remarks made a few moments ago by the Honorable Mrs. BOLTON of the Twenty-second Ohio District.

Every child has the inalienable right to be born free from disease, free from deformity, and of pure blood. Every child has the inalienable right to be loved, to have individuality respected, to be trained wisely in body, mind, and soul. In a word, to be brought up in the fear and admiration of the Lord. I trust that any committees or subcommittees dealing with appropriation measures will bear this thought in mind when they allocate moneys affecting a child-welfare program.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of State Appropriation Act, 1943, to be available also for the protection and repair of the Rio Grande rectification and canalization project, $300,000, to remain available until June 30, 1944.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise particularly to ask a few questions with reference to certain items in this particular section of the bill. I notice on page 21, in line 18, an item of $35,000 for representation allowance of the Foreign Service. As I understand it, there is about $125,000 that was formerly allowed, and that amount was increased last year to $150,000. Now, here is an extra item of $35,000 to be added to the $150,000 for additional expense for the use of foreign representatives. When you use the term as it is used here, "for representation," I wonder what the item of representation really means? Allowances are made for living costs. If this is in addition to living-cost allowances, we should know something as to how it is spent. Does it apply to items necessary for the living of these representatives? I think the item of $35,000 ought to be explained, if there is anyone who can explain it and can tell us the purpose for which the funds are to be expended.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Or is the gentleman specifically asking the chairman of the committee to explain?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The representation allowance has nothing to do with the living allowance. The Foreign Service is given living allowances, and even light allowances, rent allowances, to cover differences in the exchange of money and other things. This has to do with the so-called entertainment fund.

Mr. REES of Kansas. What kind of entertainment? Does the gentleman mean that it is to provide liquor and other luxuries, or something like that?

Mr. STEFAN. It is for food and beverages; I think this particular item has to do with some emergency in Europe.

Mr. REES of Kansas. All right, now, let me call your attention to the item on page 23 where there is a much larger amount requested that is an additional item for representation. We have not been told how much the representation is going to cost, but it seems to include a lot of items for emergency auxiliary people. Who are they? This appears to be a rather new group. These representatives already have their necessary expenses paid. Is it not fair to know what the representation cost will amount to and the purpose for which it is to be used?

Mr. STEFAN. I agree with the gentleman that this probably would be subject to a point of order, but, as I understand it, this is for representation allowances in South America for an auxiliary force that we are going to send to South America. I would call the gentleman's attention, however, to the fact that the subcommittee which is making the regular appropriation for the Department of State is now holding hearings on quite a gigantic sum to be paid for an auxiliary force going into South America. This item is to furnish that auxiliary force with a representation allowance, or, rather, entertainment allowance. I think this might run to around $90,000, and that the whole amount of the representation allowances for all phases would run to around $290,000 when it is wound up. I think there should be some debate on this item.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Two hundred thousand dollars or two hundred and ninety thousand dollars sounds like quite a considerable item for representation. I think somebody should tell us what this money is going to be spent for. If we are going to spend money for parties or some kind of entertainment, it appears like a lot of money for that purpose, and if we are going to spend a part of it for refreshments they should tell us about it. If this is an item of expenditure that should not be explained, we ought to be told. If it takes most of it for entertainment, and it is the thing we are expected to do, then let us know that, too. If none of these funds from the Public Treasury are for beverages, tell us about it. If the chairman of the committee thinks it is to be used for beverages, all right; if that is what they want it for, tell us, and why.

Mr. STEFAN. It is for food and beverages.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the bill. Nothing in this bill appropriates money for any purpose such as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. REES of Kansas. What does "representation" mean?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The testimony before the committee on this item, Mr. Chairman, was largely and necessarily off the record; but I may say to the gentleman that the provision is for extra services in neutral countries, especially in Portugal and Sweden, where it is important for us to increase our diplomatic and consular representation, because in these two countries we are taking care of our interests throughout the world in those enemy countries in which we are now without representation. This amount is the smallest commensurate with reasonable disposition of our diplomatic business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But I am directing the Chairman's attention to the item on page 23. This is a different part of the bill. Those items have nothing to do with the European situation. It looks to me like a brand-new set-up from the appearance of it, and it is costing $290,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. My understanding was that the gentleman referred to representation allowances on page 21, line 18.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I did that, but I refer now especially to an item that appears to amount to $200,000 or $290,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. When the gentleman began his remarks he specifically referred to the item of $35,000 for representation allowance for foreign service. I answered him on that. If he has another item to bring up I shall be pleased to answer him on that also.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The item to which I referred now particularly is on page 23, line 11. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] suggested that the item would probably cost as much as $90,000 for representation.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield to me I think possibly I can make it a little clearer to him. The representation allowance, $35,000, was presented to us on this basis. It is required because of higher prices of food and taxes on diplomatic missions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Spain, Sweden, and Turkey were particularly mentioned as places where we had so many other things to handle. The item for the Foreign Service Auxiliary includes 232 additional employees who are required in connection with the State Department set-up in South America. It covers Foreign Service officers and this is for their salaries and the salaries of the technical people who are required to go down there. That is what the hearings demonstrated. I have the number here who are obliged to go down there. There are 166 clerks; there are attachés, 12; and agricultural advisers and commercial advisers, 5; economic analysts, 15. I have the names of those people. I was quite particular to see that they were real people who had had business experience. I cannot see anything to criticize in connection with that. There is nothing in this particular item for living allowances. Our hearings are specific on that. It covers salaries.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. This has absolutely nothing to do with salaries.

Mr. TABER. Then the State Department has misrepresented this to us.

Mr. STEFAN. No; the State Department did not misrepresent it. Representation allowance has absolutely nothing to do with salaries or taxes or living allowances.

Mr. TABER. That item is for Foreign Service Auxiliary emergency, $491,000, and that has just that situation in it. I am sorry if the gentleman is not familiar with the hearings on it, but that is the picture.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I have the hearings before me. I do not find that the item includes salaries. My understanding is that it was for some outside expense, as near as I can gather, and that is what I am trying to find out. It is in addition to salaries and other necessary expenses allowed our representatives, and is described as "representation."

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think this matter might be cleared up by reference to page 365 of the hearings.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I have that before me.

Mr. LUDLOW. There the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Shaw, defined these representation allowances, and said:

> We are asking this appropriation in order to make increases in representation allowances, particularly in quarters where there is a great deal of important diplomatic activity such, for instance, as Madrid and Stockholm. Those two capitals, from my point of view, are exceedingly important at the present time.

I would like to emphasize there is nothing in the nature of recreation or quasi-recreation involved in this representation; it is hard official business that is comprised under that term, and important official business at the present time.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That covers the item of $35,000 for the European countries, but does not cover the countries in South America. It seemed to me this is a big item. It is said to amount to $200,000 or $290,000. Surely, an item as large as that ought to have some detailed information on it. The term "representation" might cover a multitude of things and I do not see anything in the hearings or in the bill to explain it. That is the reason I raised the question.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am not familiar with the hearings at all, but I do know that the war has greatly multiplied the duties of our diplomatic representatives in all of the countries, and that is especially true in South America and the European countries.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman, and, like him, I want to see everything done to assist our diplomatic representatives in these, as well as in other countries, but these items are for so-called auxiliaries in South America.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is a deficiency bill. The bill includes $200,000 to be added to the sum of $2,280,000, for increased rentals and other expenses. There are a number of other items of additional expenses. But, Mr. Chairman, here appears to be a new addition to our Foreign Service. It does not appear to be authorized by law; but whether it is or not, this expenditure, I feel, should be explained. Line 10 on page 23 states, and I quote:

Provided, That the cost of living and representation allowances, as authorized.

And so forth. It is the "representation" item, that amounts evidently to $200,000 or $290,000, and being in addition to living expenses, and travel expenses for the auxiliary service, that ought to be explained. Surely that ought to be fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Foreign Service, auxiliary (emergency): For an additional amount for Foreign Service, auxiliary (emergency), Department of State, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the Department of State Appropriation Act, 1943, $491,000: Provided, That cost of living and representation allowances, as authorized by the act approved February 23, 1931, as amended, may be paid from this appropriation to American citizens employed hereunder.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words "and representation," in line 11 on page 23, on the ground that they are legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the item is authorized by law. Paragraph 12 of title XXII, found on page 1877 of the United States Code, provides specific authorization for the item.

Mr. REES of Kansas. As I understand, this appropriation is for a new auxiliary service, not the regular service.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri advise the Chair whether the auxiliary service referred to in the paragraph is authorized by law?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This comes within the provisions of the statute, which reads:

Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, and within the limitations of such appropriations as may be made therefor, which appropriations are authorized, ambassadors, ministers, Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers may be granted allowances for representation; and also post allowances wherever the cost of living may be proportionately so high that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, such allowances are necessary to enable such Diplomatic, Consular, and Foreign Service officers to carry on their work efficiently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has advised itself on the language referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, but the point on which the Chair would like to be enlightened is the language in the last sentence of the paragraph referring to the fact that moneys may be paid from this appropriation to American citizens employed thereunder.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, there is no specific legislation authorizing the Foreign Service Auxiliary, but it is in existence and is in operation at this time for this fiscal year. No point of order was made by the gentleman on that score. The point of order was directed at the provision for representation allowances, which are authorized by law, as I have indicated.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Not for this kind of organization, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri kindly answer one more question the Chair has in mind? Is there legislative authorization for representation allowances to be made to American citizens employed in accordance with this paragraph?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, language could not be more explicit than that just cited from paragraph 12 of title XXII, which specifically covers authorization of appropriations for cost of living and representation allowances under such circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair is concerned about is, Does the term "American citizens" as used in this paragraph refer to ambassadors, ministers, diplomatic, consular, and Foreign Service officers. Is that what the committee has in mind?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Unless they were American citizens they could not be serving as representatives of this Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they employees under the terms of this law?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly; there can be no question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the explanation made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the existing law, the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order against the language in lines 6 to 13 on page 23 that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, not authorized by law.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the point of order comes too late. There has been debate since the paragraph was read. It is now too late to interpose a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Missouri that we have not gone beyond the point at which a point of order can be made. The paragraph is still under consideration.

Does the gentleman desire to point out to the Chair anything further the Chair may consider in view of the second point of order made against the language in the paragraph?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We have passed the proposition, Mr. Chairman; we are now on the proviso. The point of order made by the gentleman did not apply to the first portion, which is a separate entity as against the proviso. Inasmuch as the point of order was not interposed at the time, it now comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman from Missouri that he will hold that the point of order does not come too late, in view of the fact that the proviso is a part of the paragraph. Does the gentleman desire to advise the Chair any further on the paragraph?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The point has been covered.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri point out to the Chair the legislative authority for the Foreign Service Auxiliary? The section referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, which has been analyzed by the Chair, refers to the language "representation" on line 11, page 23. Is there legislation to which the gentleman can refer the Chair authorizing the Foreign Service Auxiliary?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There is no specific legislation on that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses for collecting the internal revenue, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1943, $6,150,000: Provided, That the limitations on the amounts which may be expended for printing and binding, stationery, and personal services in the District of Columbia, are hereby increased from $1,606,850 to $1,839,850, from $565,400 to $616,290, and from $11,006,542 to $11,373,785, respectively.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Page 25, after line 11, insert a new paragraph:

"Office of Treasurer of the United States, salaries: For an additional allowance for salaries, Office of the Treasurer of the United States, fiscal year, 1943, $250,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is offered to supply a deficiency created by the Senate amendment to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) agreed to by the House and returned to the Senate this morning. If this amount is not provided, it will be necessary for the Treasurer of the United States to immediately discontinue essential and indispensable activities. We ask that it be included in the pending bill at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to bring to the attention of the House again the provision for mother and child care, referred to in the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], and to remind the House that the Appropriations Committee in its report left the door open for an appropriation after enabling legislation has been passed. I am very glad to receive assurance from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] that he would help us secure enabling legislation which would provide care for the mothers and children. I understand that either the Naval Affairs Committee or the Committee on Military Affairs has some such idea in mind, that is, care for the wives of the soldiers. I would like very much to show the House two children here in Washington who are mentally deficient and deformed because of improper care at birth. I know every Member is interested in protecting both the mothers and the children of the Nation, and it is only a question of working out some plan that is acceptable.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In connection with that, I think the House should bear in mind that on April 30, with the closing down of the W. P. A., there will be eliminated all these nursing projects, where thousands and thousands of children are being cared for, under which a number of children attending these nurseries have care, because of the fact that the mothers have taken jobs in defense industries.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is true. I believe that the place of the mothers is in the home, bringing up the children. Some sort of care must be given to children if their mothers cannot be at home and they are obliged to work in industry in order to win the war. An undernourished child and a lonely, unhappy child are the most pathetic things in the world. Mothers and children must be properly nourished. The future strength of America is dependent on the health of both the mothers and the children of today.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read to the bottom of page 28.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 42, insert the following new section:

"SECTION 301. No part of any appropriation or authorization in this act shall be used to pay any part of the salary or expenses of any person whose salary or expenses are prohibited from being paid either in appropriation or authorization in any other act, but this prohibition shall be effective only during the term that such prohibition in such other act is effective."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] offered to the other bills that have been paseed, and I am offering it at his request. Let me add this. So far as the charges of subversive activities are concerned, a special committee has been appointed by the Committee on Appropriations, to hear those charges, and I am in hopes that they will start hearings immediately on them.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is a provision, Mr. Chairman, that is already carried in other bills that have been passed and we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

ABSENTEEISM AND MANPOWER PROBLEMS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, since the pending deficiency appropriation bill was reported to the House, members of the committee have been called by friends of some of the governmental departments and agencies and others, demanding to know why some of the agencies did not receive all the funds they requested of them. It is a lot of arrogance, but it has been done; just as if the Appropriations Committee had to make any excuses or explanations to some of the agencies why they did not get all the money they requested.

We have been told that the work of some of these agencies would be seriously hampered unless the funds were allowed and made immediately available. Many telegrams and letters have also been received from various sections of the country, saying some rather uncomplimentary things about Members whose responsibility it is, after hearing all the evidence, to report the bill to this House. Even threats of political retaliation have come to some members of the committee. A few radical and irresponsible labor agitators have taken very serious exceptions to some of the things Members of Congress have said to some witnesses, including one Cabinet member who appeared before our committee.

I have personally been taken to task with reference to only three items that were slashed or eliminated by the committee. Perhaps a majority of the inquiries or threats have been made with reference to the request to the committee that was not granted for the Department of Labor for the alleged purpose of curing absenteeism in the industries of the country having war contracts. The committee heard the evidence as presented by the Secretary of Labor, in which she went into some detail to explain what she thought were the main causes of absenteeism. She spoke of illness, unfavorable working conditions, and advocated more and better drinking fountains for the workers, all of which should, of course, be corrected. Evidently, however, those things were not the main causes of the trouble.

The charming and clever Madam Secretary, after making what I am certain our committee felt were trivial suggestions for improvement, then wound up by urging the committee to give her more funds so she might send some of her people into the local labor unions to educate them and ask them to educate these absentees that form about 10 percent of those who work in industries, and that would cure the absenteeism. The committee thought otherwise.

The testimony of Madam Secretary, who proved to be not only a very clever, but evasive witness, brought out that the major part of the absenteeism came at week ends. That is to say, either Saturdays or Mondays. She did not mention hang-overs by name, but admitted that the situation with reference to absenteeism is getting gradually but considerably worse as time goes on.

I have asked the indulgence of Members at this time in order to show some concrete evidence that there are considerable hang-overs at the end of each week. The fact that nine-tenths of the absenteeism in factories having vitally essential war contracts come on week ends is pretty good evidence, but I have much better evidence than that. I have received a rather large number of telegrams from these absentees themselves, complaining because Members of Congress have had the temerity to ask about it.

I shall not put all of these silly, arrogant, and threatening telegrams into the RECORD, but let me read a part of one. This is a night letter sent to me from Vallejo, Calif.:

Your speech on absenteeism and strikes stinks. Come out here and help build warships and eat worms like we do.

I shall not place his name in the RECORD, although he claims to be the past president of a Washington County political organization of some importance. He evidently felt important when he sent that message. I have other similar messages and letters, some of which boldly threaten me politically. Many of them are so worded as to strongly point to week-end hang-overs.

Many of you heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON] this afternoon state as a matter of fact that the number of man-days lost in the shipping industries of the country during the past year would have constructed 42 merchant ships, ships that are vitally needed at this time. And yet, while our brave men on the high seas are battling enemy U-boats and giving their lives for liberty, bear in mind that 10 percent of the industrial workers are absenting themselves from work for one reason or another or without any reason at all, many of whom insist on week-end hang-overs, as is shown by this and other insolent and threatening telegrams received by members of the committee who dare criticize a practice that has shocked decent citizens everywhere.

Now please bear in mind that the one main suggestion of Madam Secretary, the one cure-all for this outrageous and shocking practice of absenteeism, was a plea for more and more money to add to her present overcrowded pay roll in order to educate the local labor unions so that they might in turn educate these thoughtless and, I am sorry to say, in some instances, irresponsible workers, who, despite the fact that they are receiving the highest wages they ever got, persist in absenting themselves practically every week end. The committee evidently felt from her testimony that if Madam Secretary does not actually condone this outrageous and shocking practice of workers deliberately absenting themselves from work, especially on week ends, that she is certainly not too deeply disturbed about it. Read her exact words in the hearings, as shown in part on page 554, which testimony speaks for itself:

LABOR LOST THROUGH ABSENTEEISM OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like to ask some questions, Madam Secretary. I was very much interested in your statement. I am sure the committee appreciates the information given. I am especially interested in your statement concerning absenteeism on the part of workers in industry. Will you please give the committee the exact figures on the loss of man-hours or man-days, or both, on account of absenteeism?

Secretary PERKINS. I think it has been estimated at about 350,000,000 man-days lost from illness and about 251,000,000 man-days lost by industrial accidents. Absenteeism is impossible to estimate, but those two we can estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have noticed repeated statements in newspapers quoting Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker as stating, I believe, that 10 percent of the workers in industries with war contracts are absenting themselves from work. That seems like an unreasonably high percentage, and I want exact figures, not an estimate.

Secretary PERKINS. We do not have any figures on that, nor do we know how to get any figures that are exact on that point. But taking 350,000,000 man-days lost through illness and 251,000,000 man-days lost through industrial accidents, that represents in itself a considerable number of man-days, as you can see. When they are absent on account of illness or when they are absent on account of accidents, there is nothing blameworthy on them. But they are preventable, although the individual is not blameworthy if he has an accident.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then, you say that you and your Department are doing everything within your power to correct that unfortunate and unhappy situation?

Secretary PERKINS. That is one of the reasons why we are asking for this appropriation. We feel that we are not doing everything possible. We are doing everything we can today, lacking real facilities. But there is a limit to what you can do by advice which you print in the public press. That does not catch on as does the laying on of hands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The fact is, Madam Secretary, there are thousands of good citizens, many of whom have boys in active service in the armed forces, who are deeply disturbed about this shocking situation of absenteeism in the various industries. There is also a deep-seated feeling that you, Madam Secretary, are not very much disturbed or even concerned about it. That's the point I am trying to drive home.

Secretary PERKINS. We have done the very best we could do. We have pointed out these things as often as possible. We are very hopeful that with a little more money and a few more people in the field possibly we can make the local unions in the locality conscious of the particular absenteeism problem of their particular members in their particular plants.

STRIKES IN WAR PRODUCTION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Madam Secretary, let me say to you frankly that in my judgment, it is going to take a whale of a lot more than giving you a little more money in order to make the local labor unions or this 10 percent of the workers, who are letting America down in this crisis, absentee conscious. Unless this absentee and strike racket stops in these war industries, Congress is going to do something about it whether you can or not. Whether you know it or not, the country is fighting mad about it. And that reminds me what a great many citizens and taxpayers in Oklahoma, and the rest of the Nation, who have given their money, their time, and their sons to this war effort, feel that you, as Secretary of Labor, are much more concerned about social gains than in winning the war or stopping these strikes that are sabotaging the war program. And I think it would be well to discuss informally, either on or off the record, your attitude with reference to these strikes in defense industries.

Secretary PERKINS. I should be very glad to do so. I am sorry if anybody imagines that I have encouraged strikes at any time, either in wartime or at any other time, but particularly in a wartime like this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. How many men are out on strikes at this moment? And how many strikes and how many man-days have we lost since Pearl Harbor on account of strikes and walk-outs?

Secretary PERKINS. That is a question that I could not possibly answer because I do not have the figures for today; but I can give them to you for the month past.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like to have it for the record.

Secretary PERKINS. It is a small number in comparison to days lost for the other causes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, working conditions and what you call other causes should be improved wherever possible to do so, but let me remind you that our gallant men in the armed forces are not complaining about the bad condition of their fox holes nor are they absenting themselves or striking for higher wages.

Again the committee has been criticized for its failure to give the Manpower Commission additional funds on which to operate. As one Member of Congress who has a profound respect for and much confidence in the ability and integrity of the genial gentleman who is Director of the Manpower Commission, Governor McNutt, I am by no means in sympathy with his apparent failure to recognize the vital importance of maintaining the American home. Both the Governor and General Hershey appeared before the committee at the same time and it was unfortunate for the General to appear before the committee with the Governor, who is a very brilliant, fair, and versatile witness. Let me add that I have a very high regard for Governor McNutt. I consider him one of the ablest executives in all the Government. It is significant, however, that both the General and the Governor, were free with the use of the expression "I issued a directive." The fact is the General has issued so many directives to draft boards that some Boards have written me that he has made the intent of the law even more confusing. These so-called directives will be a powerful factor in helping make certain the passage of the Kilday bill that will set forth in no unmistakable terms the formula for the Manpower Commission and Director Hershey to follow. Again I must quote from the record of the hearings. Let the witnesses speak for themselves:

CONSIDERATION GIVEN TO FARM LABOR PROBLEM

Mr. JOHNSON. I noticed, Governor, that you appeared recently before another committee over at the other end of the Capitol, in your capacity as Director of the Manpower Commission. Newspapers throughout the country quoted you as saying that during this year 10 out of 14 able-bodied men, irrespective of their family status, between 18 and 38, will be called for some part in the war effort. I refer, of course, to your statement about your so-called work or fight order.

Mr. MCNUTT. Ten out of fourteen between the ages of 18 and 38.

Mr. JOHNSON. And that applies to men only in the category between the ages of 18 and 38?

Mr. MCNUTT. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. Just what did you mean by that statement?

Mr. MCNUTT. Just that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was in hopes, Governor, that you might wish to amplify your so-called work or fight order. I realize that you have a tremendous job, a Herculean task, a task that would try the patience of any man. I know that you are conscientiously doing the job assigned you and putting everything you have into it, as you have done in every job you have ever undertaken. And yet, I must say to you frankly, Governor, that your statement that you meant "just that" does not answer the question that I was driving at. I assume, and I think the country assumes from your various statements, that you as Director of the Manpower Commission are concerned primarily if not solely with what happens to be one's occupation for the moment. That, of course, is important but not everything to be considered. There are many of us who believe that the matter of keeping the home ties intact during this emergency is of vital importance, and I must confess I am surprised and disappointed that apparently little if any consideration is being given by you in this important factor. I am further of the opinion that unless the manpower problem is approached from a more lenient and realistic angle toward the heads of families, especially fathers with small children, that Congress will take the proverbial bull by the horns and do something about it, like the passage of the Kilday bill.

There is another problem, a most serious problem, facing the farmers, who must feed, not only our own Army but those of our allies, and that is the threatened food shortage. As I am sure you know, thousands of young farmers, many of whom are the only dependents on the farm, have volunteered or have been drafted into the armed forces or else have gone to work in essential war industries. This situation is more serious than you might possibly know. The Secretary of Agriculture has said to the farmers that they must raise at least 10 percent more farm products, and especially foodstuffs, in 1943 than they did in 1942. Farmers will strive and work overtime to continue to feed the world, but it is obvious that this cannot possibly be done at the rate farm hands, farm tenants, and farm owners and their sons are leaving the farms, not only for the armed forces but for higher wages in airplane factories and other war industries.

Another serious problem soon in the making is to get some of those farmers back to producing the things that our men and boys in the armed forces must have if they are to eat during the next several months. There are literally hundreds of farms that will go untilled this year unless something is done to correct the unfortunate situation, and very quickly. There are many dairy herds in my State that are being slaughtered because there is nobody to do the work, with a milk and butter shortage threatening the country. The present farm problem, Governor, is serious, and I am wondering if you are giving it the special consideration it deserves.

Mr. MCNUTT. It was one of the first to receive consideration. The directive covering the protection of dairy farmers came first. The last directive which has gone down having to do with the implementation of the Tydings amendment was the result of conferences with the Senate Agriculture Committee and a subcommittee of which Senator TYDINGS was a member, and long conferences with various farm organizations and the Department of Agriculture. We finally arrived at a meeting of minds, and that directive represents such a meeting of minds.

Mr. JOHNSON. Frankly, I must confess that I don't like that word "directive." It is being overused and much overemphasized by too many bureau heads these days. After all, the plain intent of Congress should be carried out rather than what the head of some outside organization might agree on. If the Tydings amendment means anything, it would defer essential farm work. But up to date the directives I have seen that have gone out from General Hershey's office have been about as clear as mud on the subject of deferring farm labor. As a result many farm communities have almost exhausted their farm labor. I personally know of several instances where the only son of a farmer has either volunteered or been drafted into the service, or else has gone to work in some industry.

I am sure you will agree that one of the most serious situations facing the Nation at this time is the problem of producing more food. It just can't be done unless there is a decided change in the present policy. Our farms are being drained of manpower. This is a matter that our people are becoming very much disturbed and alarmed about.

Mr. MCNUTT. I do not know of any problem that has received or will receive more careful attention.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1975, the first deficiency appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers and designation of paragraphs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the deficiency appropriation bill may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein, in connection with the remarks I made in the Committee this afternoon, statements and examinations made in the Appropriations Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday next, after completion of business on the Speaker's table and the conclusion of any other special orders, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 839) to amend the act approved May 27, 1937, by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation of lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. WHITE, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. MURDOCK, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. ROCKWELL.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and other special orders, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of the business of the House and other special orders, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS—LEND-LEASE ACT

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 1501) to extend for 1 year the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION TO THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 5.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas there have always existed close ties of friendship between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama; and

Whereas these friendly relations, based on the mutual respect and admiration of two free and independent nations, happily grow stronger day by day; and

Whereas the Government and the people of the Republic of Panama have cooperated wholeheartedly with the United States of America in the present world conflict; and

Whereas on January 6, 1943, the National Assembly of Panama graciously adopted a resolution expressing solidarity and extending felicitations to the Congress of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States express its deep appreciation to the National Assembly of the Republic of Panama, and to the people which it represents, for this message of friendship and solidarity, which had as it inspiration the determination of achieving complete victory over our common enemies and restoring the principles of liberty and democracy throughout the world.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the National Assembly of the Republic of Panama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon and to include in those remarks certain letters and a statement from the magazine entitled "Child."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we thank Thee that Thou hast formed our minds to seek Thee, our hearts to love Thee, and hast made our spirits restless for the rest that is alone in Thee. Since Thou hast set our feet or a path so full of chance and change that we know not what a day may bring forth, and hast curtained every day with darkness and rounded our little life with sleep, grant that we may use with diligence the fleeting span of time vouchsafed to us, filling sunny hours with labor, working while it is called day, knowing that the night cometh when man's work is done.

Bowing now at this noonday shrine, may Thy name be hallowed, may our hearts be cleansed, and may our daily duties shine with the halo of a new glory.

"O healing peace of this withdrawing place!
O central calm that soothes storm-shaken men!
Refresh our fainting souls, but better still Go with us to our tasks of life again."

In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 25, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 641) to amend section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 relating to the payment of rental allowances to certain officers.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5) expressing to the national assembly and people of the Republic of Panama appreciation of their friendship for the United States.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 839) to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WHITE, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. MURDOCK, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. ROCKWELL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1975) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 707. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Attorney General; and

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

REPRESENTATION OF SENATE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. GLASS) presented a letter, which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1943.

To the Senate:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act approved May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint Senators ELMER THOMAS and CARL HAYDEN to represent the Senate Appropriations Committee on the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

CARTER GLASS,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Appropriations.

JOINT STATEMENT BY SENATOR AUSTIN AND REPRESENTATIVE WADSWORTH ON PROPOSED NATIONAL WAR SERVICE ACT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. the Committee on Military Affairs will commence public hearings on Senate bill 666. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at this point, a joint statement by Representative WADSWORTH, who introduced the corresponding bill in the House of Representatives, and myself relating to what would be done if the proposed National War Service Act of 1943 were passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT THE AUSTIN-WADSWORTH BILL WOULD DO

It would provide for over-all organization and total mobilization of all our skills, and of our man and woman power.

It would make known the equal liability of all in the war effort.

It would enable Government to cure the evils of unbalance, hoarding, piracy, absenteeism, inadequate training for management and supervision, labor turn-over, and such shortages as those in agriculture.

It would remove the confusion now prevailing under coercion through orders and indirect sanctions.

It would substitute due process of law for Executive acts, thereby implementing the will of the people that, in this war, if any "mobile" person should refuse to perform his assigned duty, punishment could be applied only after conviction of an offense in our courts of justice.

It would stimulate moral power by voluntary methods to be employed when and so long as they are effective.

It would provide for selection and assignment of every man between the ages of 18 and 65 and every woman between the ages of 18 and 50, subject to reasonable exemptions and deferments.

It would erect safeguards for family life, for wage and hour laws, overtime pay, collective bargaining, mediation and arbitration, and other procedures for the settlement of labor controversies and questions.

It would preserve the right to join or not to join any union, where the person concerned is assigned to a job. It would not affect the status of a person entering employment without being assigned.

It would provide compensation to trainees during such training, and offer the opportunity of education for stepping up skills.

It would preserve reemployment, seniority rights, and rates of pay to the same extent as men in the armed services have such rights preserved.

It would keep, as the operating agency in making selections, the democratic Selective Service System. Such selection would be made under the designed direction of the War Manpower Commission.

It would provide for the mobilization and designed direction of willing workers who, left to themselves, would be unable to know where and how best to serve the Nation at war.

WHAT THE BILL DOES NOT DO

1. It does not put civilian enterprise or labor under military law or military control.
2. It does not break up families.
3. It does not form labor battalions.
4. It does not break up or abridge the freedom of anyone assigned to join or not to join a labor union.
5. It does not destroy reemployment and seniority rights.
6. It does not change the rate of compensation or the hours of service in any occupation to which anyone is assigned.
7. It does not discriminate between groups, such as agricultural workers and industrial workers.
8. It does not require service of a kind beyond one's abilities.
9. It does not make liable any woman who has living with her and under her care either a child or children under 18 years of age, or one or more other persons, who, on account of age or illness, needs her personal care, nor any pregnant woman.
10. It does not assign anyone to a location where reasonable housing accommodations for such person or his or her immediate family are not available.
11. It does not move people from place to place unless necessary to the war effort.
12. It does not establish a new principle or practice for democratic countries.
13. It does not abridge the sovereignty of the several States.
14. It does not destroy the democratic process.
15. It does not bring into question the patriotism or courage of the citizen.
16. It does not make any permanent change in our way of life.
17. It does not extend beyond May 1, 1945, and may be terminated before then by concurrent resolution of Congress.

Public hearings will begin March 2, 1943.

WARREN R. AUSTIN.
JAMES W. WADSWORTH.

ENDORSEMENT BY SECRETARY OF WAR OF PROPOSED NATIONAL SERVICE ACT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on February 26, the Secretary of War, Hon. Henry L. Stimson, made a report to Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, on Senate bill 666, containing, among other statements, the following:

The War Department strongly endorses S. 666, Seventy-eighth Congress, a bill to provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of selective war service with the aid of the Selective Service System and urges its prompt passage by the Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the report submitted by the Secretary of War may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
February 26, 1943.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The War Department strongly endorses S. 666, Seventy-eighth Congress, a bill to provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of civilian selective war service with the aid of the Selective Service System and urges its prompt passage by the Congress. Comments on specific provisions of the bill will not be given at this time.

S. 666 would make every man who has registered or is required to register under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and every woman between the ages of 18 and 50, with certain exceptions, who are required to register under this bill, liable to contribute by personal service to the war effort in a noncombatant capacity in industry, agriculture, or any other occupation, activity, or employment which the President shall from time to time determine to be essential to the effective prosecution of the war. The power to determine that such workers are needed is vested in the President. He may call for volunteers for service and, if the response is inadequate or if he deems it impracticable to call for volunteers, may, either directly or through the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, direct the Selective Service System to supply the required number of persons. The Selective Service System would be maintained intact, and would be utilized as the agency to classify and select those persons to be assigned to service.

A total mobilization of our man and woman power is essential to win the war. Only through comprehensive legislation, such as S. 666, to place on everyone the equal obligation to serve in the war effort can a total mobilization be achieved.

Britain and Russia have national war service laws, under which men and women may be assigned to nonmilitary as well as military duties. Both Germany and Japan likewise have such laws. These countries are more fully mobilized than we are. We cannot wage war to the greatest advantage and with minimum losses, or contribute our full part to the united war effort, without mobilizing our human resources with a thoroughness at least approaching that of our enemies and our principal allies. Furthermore we owe an obligation to our fighting men to effect an extension of the Selective Service System to the home front to assure a steady, full supply of munitions and supplies necessary to win the war.

At this crucial stage of the war, we can no longer depend solely on voluntary methods backed by indirect sanctions to cure the growing critical labor shortages which threaten the war effort. There are labor shortages, present or imminent, in agriculture, mining, and industry. There is increasing evidence of the inadequacy of the present controls to achieve a full utilization of our manpower and to solve the labor shortage problem. As a result, in several instances where labor shortage emergencies existed, it has been necessary to take men from the Army to supply labor. This is a practice that is wasteful and disruptive to the Army's training program. As a further result, proposals have been made to give blanket deferments to groups of workers, thus limiting greatly the manpower pool on which the Army depends for its soldiers. We must direct additional labor into essential occupations rather than keep the men out of the Army who are needed for the job of winning the war.

S. 666 recognizes that if possible the problem of labor supply should be solved by voluntary methods. It provides for compulsion only when voluntary methods fail or are for other reasons inadequate.

Inasmuch as the committee has requested that this report be expedited, the Bureau of the Budget has authorized its submission without a determination by the Bureau as to whether it conforms to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT (S. Doc. No. 8)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $4,000,000 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT

A letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 301, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, to authorize renewal of expiring 5-year level premium term policies of those in active military or naval service and certain others outside the continental limits of the United States, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Finance.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of War (2) and Agriculture (2), Federal Works Agency, The National Archives, and Executive Office of the President (Office of War Information) which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated.

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of Local No. 358 (C. I. O.), of the United Grocery Store Employees Union, Detroit, Mich., favoring restoration by the Senate of an appropriation of $1,400,000 for continuance of operations of the National Resources Planning Board eliminated by the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A resolution of the Fraternal Congress of Maryland and the District of Columbia and also the forty-third annual session of the New York Fraternal Congress, favoring the adoption of an improved and revised calendar dividing the year into 12 months composed of 4 equal quarters to start with the year 1945; to the Committee on Commerce.

A resolution of the one hundred and twenty-sixth convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Ohio, held in Cleveland, Ohio, requesting that the religious conscience of America be adequately represented on the United States delegation at the peace conference following the war; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolutions of Compton Parlor, No. 273, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Compton; Topanga Parlor, No. 269, of Canoga Park, and Los Angeles Parlor, No. 124, of Los Angeles, both of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, all in the State of California, protesting against the formation of a Japanese unit of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Finance.

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to oppose any legislation transferring to the Federal Government the administration of unemployment compensation

"Whereas the Federal Social Security Board, and other Federal agencies and Federal officials, propose to recommend to the Congress plans that will involve the nationalization of unemployment insurance in the 51 States and jurisdictions of the United States; and

"Whereas transfer of these proper State functions to the Federal Government would eliminate all consideration of local conditions of living and employment; and

"Whereas New Jersey will have collected from employers and workers within its own borders and have available for distribution to jobless workers approximately $285,000,000 at the close of 1943; and

"Whereas the proposal to federalize unemployment insurance systems of the various States seriously threatens the availability of this fund for use in the State of New Jersey alone, since the unified national system might involve pooling of all State funds; and

"Whereas the New Jersey Legislature by the enactment of chapter 386, pamphlet laws of 1941, directed that the employment service division of the New Jersey Unemployment Compensation Commission, now loaned to the Federal Government for the war emergency, be returned to State service: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

"1. The Legislature of the State of New Jersey considers that post-war problems may be properly administered only under a State employment security system including both unemployment compensation and employment service and, therefore, respectfully urges and petitions the Congress of the United States to oppose the enactment of any proposal involving the transfer of the administration of unemployment compensation from the States to the Federal Government.

"2. The secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this joint resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Senators and Representatives of the State of New Jersey in the Congress, the Federal Security Administrator, and the Federal Social Security Board.

"3. This joint resolution shall take effect immediately."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the States of Wyoming; to the Committee on Finance:

"Enrolled Joint Memorial 5

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress and the Veterans' Bureau of the United States of America to locate a veterans' hospital at Thermopolis in Hot Springs County, Wyo.

"Whereas one of the inevitable results of the present war will be an increase in the number of members and veterans of the armed services who require hospitalization and medical treatment; and

"Whereas there are located at Thermopolis, in Hot Springs County, Wyo., some of the finest medicinal hot mineral springs in the world, and such city is otherwise ideally suited by reason of climate and other conditions as a location for such a hospital: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress and the Veterans' Bureau of the United States to consider and take appropriate action for the location of a military and veterans' hospital at the city of Thermopolis, Hot Springs County, Wyo.; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to United States Senators JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY and E. V. ROBERTSON, to Congressman FRANK A. BARRETT, and to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau of the United States."

A concurrent resolution of the general court of the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to create a pharmacy corps in the United States Army

"Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to create a pharmacy corps in the United States Army; and

"Whereas there is a definite need in this war emergency for the capable handling of drugs, medicines and pharmaceutical supplies which are used in the treatment of diseases of our boys and girls in the armed forces: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened, That the general court of the State of New Hampshire goes on record as urgently requesting the Congress of the United States to pass legislation without delay to create a pharmacy corps in the United States Army, and be it further resolved that the secretary of state be directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of War, the Surgeon General of the United States Army and to the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress."

By Mr. GILLETTE:

A resolution adopted by a meeting held in Carnegie Hall, New York City, favoring the setting up of a systematic and definite relief program for the children of the stricken and hungry countries of Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolutions adopted in commemoration of the silver anniversary of the proclamation of independence by the people of Lithuania, held on February 14, 1943, at Webster Hall, New York City, under the auspices of the American Lithuanian Council of Greater New York, reaffirming adherence to, and faith in the enforcement of, the Atlantic Charter and the Declaration of the United Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Bison, Kans., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit liquor sales and to suppress vice in the vicinity of military camps and naval establishments; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A resolution of the House of Delegates of the State of Maryland; to the Commitee on Military Affairs:

"House resolution requesting Congress to enact legislation to establish a Pharmacy Corps within the United States Army

"Whereas the experience of every civilized country in the world, as exemplified by the laws on their statute books governing the practice of pharmacy, including those on the statute books of all of the States of our own country, requires that a pharmacist shall have at least 4 years of professional training in a college of pharmacy to make him a safe person to be entrusted with the responsibility of handling the many dangerous drugs and medicines prescribed by physicians, such as strychnine, morphine, sulfanilamide, bichloride of mercury, serums and vaccines, etc.; and

"Whereas correspondingly competent pharmaceutical service is not afforded the men serving in the Army and is not comparable to that received by our civilian population, such services being performed in the Army in many cases by men with only 90 days of emergency training and in other cases by those who have had no pharmaceutical training whatsoever, thus jeopardizing the health and welfare of our soldiers; and

"Whereas the men in the Army should be afforded pharmaceutical service of at least the same competency and efficiency as that afforded the civilian population; and

"Whereas this can only be accomplished by creating a Pharmacy Corps in the Army, which will have the authority required and the personnel of which will be adequately educated and trained for the purchase, selection, manufacture standardization, storage, and dispensing of medicines and for such other pharmaceutical and administrative duties as their education and training qualifies them to perform: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby requested to enact, without delay, legislation to establish a Pharmacy Corps within the United States Army; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be and he is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, to the Surgeon General of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the United States Congress from the State of Maryland."

By Mr. WHERRY (for himself and Mr. BUTLER):

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

"Legislative Resolution 9 opposing war time

"Whereas daylight working hours are a vital factor in the preparation and harvesting of crops, the feeding of farm animals, and the production of farm commodities; and

"Whereas laborers and office workers are, under the new war time, compelled to go to work, and children are compelled to go to school, during the winter months while it is still dark, with a consequent increase in the use of electricity;

"Whereas the new war time, since its establishment, has proved to be wasteful, rather than time saving: therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of Nebraska in fifty-sixth session assembled:

"1. That the Congress of the United States is urged to repeal the act establishing war time, commonly known as daylight-saving time.

"2. That a copy of this resolution, suitably engrossed by the clerk, be sent to each Senator and Representative from Nebraska in the Congress of the United States."

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Joint Memorial 1

"Joint memorial memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to pass at the present session of Congress a social-security law which will allow benefits to every citizen who desires the same, including members of the military forces of our country

"Whereas the present social-security law omits some groups from participating in the benefits of social security; and

"Whereas we feel adequate social-security legislation will solve the social welfare problems which are of most vital concern to our Nation, and will be a foundation for a more secure future of all citizens of our Nation; and

"Whereas some of our citizens in the military personnel of our Nation, due to their former employment, are allowed the advantages of social security and others are not, and each one is working for the same objective and each should have the same opportunity to enjoy the benefits of a secure future; and

"Whereas, in the past groups of people with the same interests have set up, or through legislation have enacted retirement funds, pensions, or security for their future plans, some having been successful and some having failed; and

"Whereas to insure the future of these organizations they should be allowed to come under the National Security Act: Be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah, That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, a Social Security Act which will retain the Federal-State relationship now provided for in the Social Security Act, but which will include every citizen who wishes to participate, including the military forces of our country; be it further

"Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of State, and to each Senator and Representative of the United States Congress from this State; be it further

"Resolved, That provision be made for farmer, business, and professional men and other self-employed persons to buy into the social-security program on terms comparable to those now in effect for employed people."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

S. 643. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to pay the costs of transportation of certain civilian employees, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 71).

By Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims:

S. 555. A bill for the relief of Almos W. Glasgow; with an amendment (Rept. No. 72);

H. R. 1639. A bill for the relief of Frank and Paulina Rublein and Mrs. Ethel Bowers; without amendment (Rept. No. 74); and

H. R. 1786. A bill for the relief of Fairbanks, Morse & Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 75).

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 675. A bill to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, so as to extend the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act to conscientious objectors; without amendment (Rept. No. 73).

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

S. 360. A bill to provide temporary additional compensation for employees in the Postal Service; with an amendment (Rept. No. 76).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 789. A bill to provide for the mailing of annual notices to owners of tax exempt properties in the District of Columbia;

S. 790. A bill to prohibit the issuance of alcoholic beverage licenses in certain localities in the District of Columbia, to prohibit advertising the price of such beverages, and for other purposes; and

S. 791. A bill to effectuate the intent of the Congress as expressed in section 1, paragraph (k) of Public Law 846, Seventy-seventh Congress, approved December 24, 1942, by adding to the list of institutions named in said paragraph the name of the American Tree Association, an institution similar to the institutions so named; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

S. 792. A bill to increase the amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 793. A bill to establish a reserve of Government-owned agricultural commodities; and

S. 794. A bill to provide for a new base period, and for considering increases in the cost of farm labor, in determining parity prices for certain agricultural commodities; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 795. A bill relating to certain restrictions applicable to agricultural commodities; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

S. 796. A bill relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. LANGER introduced Senate bill 797, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. LANGER also introduced Senate bill 798, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. LANGER also (for himself and Mr. GURNEY) introduced Senate bill 799, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 800. A bill to authorize certain officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard to act as notaries public during the existence of war or a national emergency and 6 months thereafter; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKS:

S. 801. A bill for the relief of Clara A. Andresen; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. BYRD introduced Senate bill 802, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BARBOUR:

S. 803. A bill for the relief of Marie A. Atanasio; and

S. 804. A bill for the relief of Ralph B. Coleman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 805. A bill for the relief of William D. Warren; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 806. A bill for the relief of the estate of E. H. Zimmerman; and

S. 807. A bill for the relief of Mary Frances Hutson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. J. Res. 39. Joint resolution to extend certain provisions of law relating to overtime compensation to employees in the Library of Congress; to the Committee on Civil Service.

INCREASE OF SOLDIERS' BASE PAY

Mr. LANGER. I introduce a bill to amend section 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to increase the monthly base pay of enlisted men.

In this connection I wish to say that several months ago, when the matter was before the Senate, I made a motion to raise the base pay to $100, and the bill I am now introducing proposes to carry out that suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 797) to amend section 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to increase the monthly base pay of enlisted men, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES BY H. O. L. C.

Mr. LANGER. I introduce a bill relating to foreclosure of mortgages held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

In this connection I wish to say that hundreds of folks are losing their homes in the Northwest, among them many university professors, because the cost of living has gone up without a corresponding increase in salaries, with the result that they cannot meet payments to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 798) relating to foreclosure of mortgages held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

LANDS IN TRUST FOR INDIAN USE

Mr. LANGER. On behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] and myself, I introduce a bill to declare that the United States holds certain lands in trust for the Indian use, and for other purposes. It relates to South Dakota and North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 799) to declare that the United States holds certain lands in trust for Indian use, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 1975) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONFIRMATION BY SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. HATCH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION EDUCATION, AND SO FORTH, OF DISABLED MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES AND THOSE IN WAR INDUSTRIES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. TAFT submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 180) to provide vocational rehabilitation education, training, and other services to persons disabled while members of the armed forces, or disabled in war industries or otherwise and to render such persons fit for service in war industries, agriculture, or other useful civilian industry, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON HOUSING

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], I submit a resolution with regard to an investigation of the housing situation.

Some days ago I submitted a similar resolution providing for such an investigation by a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor. Because of the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency also has had to deal with F. H. A. and the housing under its charge, it has seemed desirable to have this special committee, made up of three members of the Committee on Education and Labor and three members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. That is the only change in the resolution which I heretofore submitted.

The resolution (S. Res. 112) was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas the United States Government is now the owner of numerous projects to provide residence quarters for war workers and lower-income groups which were constructed by the United States Housing Authority, the Federal Works Administrator, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Farm Security Administration, the Defense Homes Corporation, and other agencies; and

Whereas the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal home-loan banks, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Loan Administrator, the Federal Works Administrator, and other agencies have financed or assisted the financing of various other housing activities; and

Whereas on February 24, 1942, the President of the United States, acting under the authority vested in him by title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, provided for the consolidation of functions of Federal agencies relating to housing in a National Housing Agency, and said National Housing Agency has continued to exercise the functions consolidated in it; and

Whereas the effect of said Executive order expires with the expiration of the First War Powers Act, 1941, and great confusion will result from the expiration of said Executive order if permanent legislative provision is not made to deal with the subject of housing; and

Whereas numerous projects have been constructed under emergency legislation to provide housing for war workers, the disposition of which housing after the war has been left for future legislative determination; and

Whereas the figures now obtainable appear to show that there is now a serious shortage of housing, and the construction of housing in the period which follows the war should be an effective means of preventing industrial depression; and there is need for a constructive and over-all plan for the provision of such housing through private and public agencies; and for the permanent coordination of all Government activities related to such housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That there is hereby established a special committee to be known as the Special Committee on Housing, to be composed of three members of the Committee on Education and Labor to be appointed by the chairman of such committee, and three members of the Committee on Banking and Currency to be appointed by the chairman of such committee, which special committee is hereby authorized—

(1) To study the work of all branches of the National Housing Agency, including the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Federal Public Housing Authority, the Defense Homes Corporation, the Alley Dwelling Authority of the District of Columbia, and all other Federal agencies exercising functions in connection with housing activities, and prepare a report showing the work of such agencies and the present status of all projects undertaken, financed, or managed by them;

(2) To recommend a plan for the disposition of emergency housing at the termination of the war emergency;

(3) To prepare a comprehensive plan for the construction of housing after the war, including that to be provided or financed by private capital or private agencies, and that to be provided or financed by Government funds or Government agencies, and all other housing, with special reference to the possibility of encouraging home ownership and of eliminating slums and other deteriorated areas, and with special reference to the extent of the necessity of the Federal Government's subsidizing housing for lower income groups.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to make reports on pending nominations, bills, and resolutions during any adjournment or recess of the Senate following today's session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs be permitted to file reports during the interim between now and Thursday in the event the Senate shall adjourn or recess from today to Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE NAVY COLLEGE TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there has been much comment in the press and elsewhere concerning the operation of the naval college training program.

The Navy Department has completed its regulations with respect to this program, and will shortly have ready for distribution in pamphlet form the details of this plan, which includes information as to the purpose of the program, the selection of colleges under the program, arrangements made by the Navy Department with colleges, together with the details which will be of special interest to the Members of Congress, namely, the qualifications and procurement of students who may be enrolled in the program.

In view of the fact that Members of the Congress will have requests from their constituents as to the qualifications and procedure for students to enroll in this program, I ask unanimous consent that the plan as prepared by the Navy Department be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the plan was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAN FOR OPERATION OF THE NAVY COLLEGE TRAINING PROGRAM V–12

I. PURPOSE OF PROGRAM

A new Navy college-training program to be known as V–12 will eventually supersede the present V–1 and V–7 programs. Its purpose is to produce naval officers chosen from young high-school seniors, high-school graduates, and college students who appear to have the potentialities for ultimate selection as officers after carefully prescribed college training. The plan contemplates that this college training will be carried on while the men are on active duty, in uniform, receiving pay and under general military discipline.

II. SELECTION OF COLLEGES

The selection of the educational institutions which will participate in this program will be made by a joint committee consisting of representatives of the armed forces and the War Manpower Commission. In the event of failure on the part of the members of the committee to agree, the final decision will be made by the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission. All correspondence on this subject will be answered only by this committee and should be addressed to the Joint Committee for the Selection of Non-Federal Educational Institutions, room 3732, Navy Department, Arlington Annex, Washington, D. C.

III. PROCUREMENT OF STUDENTS ENROLLED IN PROGRAM

1. Qualifications

A. Civilians

(1) For admission to the screening test described in paragraph 3 (b) on page 3, the following will be considered for the test to be given April 1943:

(a) High-school and preparatory-school graduates who will have attained their 17th and not their 20th birthdays by July 1, 1943, regardless of whether they are presently attending college.

(b) High-school and preparatory-school seniors who will be graduated by July 1, 1943, provided they will have attained their 17th and not their 20th birthdays by that date.

(c) Students who do not hold certificates of graduation from a secondary school but who are continuing their education in an accredited college or university

(2) For admission to the screening test to be given late in 1943, all applicants for V-12, except those who were in college in the spring of 1943 and those to graduate from high school or prep school midyear winter 1943–44, must produce certificates of graduation from high or prep school.

(3) To be considered, each applicant shall;

(a) Be a male citizen of the United States.

(b) Be morally and physically qualified for this program, including a minimum visual acuity of 18/20.

(c) Be unmarried, and agree to remain unmarried until commissioned, unless sooner released by the Navy Department.

(d) Evidence potential officer qualifications, including appearance and scholarship records.

Candidates who cannot meet the above requirements are advised not to apply.

B. Enlisted men in Regular Navy or Naval Reserve

(1) In order to be considered, each applicant shall:

(a) Be on active duty.

(b) Be a male citizen of the United States.

(c) Be morally and physically qualified for this program, including a minimum visual acuity of 18/20.

(d) Have a minimum education of graduation from high school with a creditable scholarship rating and a maximum education of not more than 3 years of college (men having more than 2 years of college are eligible for the Reserve midshipmen program). The candidate's signed statement in this regard may be accepted.

(e) Be between his 17th and 23d birthday on the day application is submitted.

(f) Be unmarried, and agree to remain unmarried until commissioned, unless sooner released by the Navy Department.

(g) Be recommended by their commanding officers (the commanding officers through whom individual requests for this training are submitted should bear in mind that their recommendations will be the most important single factor in the selection of such men and should assure themselves that candidates whom they recommend are within the prescribed age limit, have the educational requirements and are physically qualified). The commanding officer's responsibility is clear to nominate only desirable applicants for this training which leads to commissioned officer status in the United States Naval Reserve.

(h) Must have passed the general classification test with a mark of 85 (if the individual meets all other requirements and has not taken a classification test, or the mark is not available, paragraph (g) shall be stressed).

(i) Each applicant must sign a statement that he is willing to accept reduction in rating to apprentice seamen (the rating held by other students).

2. Preference for colleges, courses of study, and branch of service

a. Successful candidates will be permitted to indicate their preferences as to colleges on the Navy list to which they wish to be assigned, and those preferences will be respected insofar as possible, within geographical limits and student availability within the area. No guaranties, however, can be made that a student's request for a given institution will be granted.

b. Students will be permitted to express preliminary choice of the branch of service, i. e., Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, at the time of assignment to the V-12 program, but this choice will not be binding. Final assignment will be based upon demonstrated ability and counseling during the first two semesters and the needs of the service.

c. Students will be permitted to express preliminary choice of the course of study; i. e., medicine, engineering, etc. Assignment and continuance in these courses will be based upon available quotas and demonstrated competence in the particular fields of subject matter required.

3. Procedures for civilian selection

a. A quota for the year 1943 of high-school seniors who will be graduated by July 1, 1943, high-school graduates, and college students not in an armed force program will be assigned to each State. One-half of this quota will be placed on active duty about July 1, 1943, and one-half about November 1, 1943.

b. A screening test will be administered at local or nearby schools or colleges for all volunteers. The screening test will be given on the same day throughout the country, and all candidates within the continental limits of the United States must take this test on the same day in order to qualify. This test will be given at a date to be announced, approximately April 2, 1943. A similar test will be given late in 1943 for the then eligible students who, after fully qualifying and being accepted, will be placed on active duty about March 1, 1944.

c. Preliminary application forms for the V-12 program will be distributed through local high schools and colleges. Each applicant must submit this form, properly filled out and certified by a high-school principal or college administrator before admission to the screening test. The certifying authority is directed to eliminate, by refusal to certify, applications of candidates who obviously fall below the physical standards or who show evidence of inadequate educational preparation.

d. Tests will be scored by various regional offices which administer the screening tests indicated in paragraph (b) above. These offices will be designated by the Training Division, Bureau of Naval Personnel.

e. During a given period of a month or six weeks, successful applicants will be requested to report at their own expense to the nearest Office of Naval Officer Procurement.

f. In the few States wherein there is no Office of Naval Officer Procurement, a temporary branch office will be set up for this purpose.

g. On reporting to the Office of Naval Officer Procurement, the candidate will be interviewed to determine potential officerlike qualities, and given a physical examination.

h. Selection will be made by a committee from candidates who are qualified up to this point. The decision of these committees will be final in choosing the proper number of candidates to fill the quota.

i. The selection committee will be composed as follows:

(1) An educator who will be selected on the basis of his competence in appraising qualifications of prospective college students.

(2) A representative civilian who will be selected from a panel nominated by the present civilian committees, which are now set up near practically every Office of Naval Officer Procurement.

(3) A naval officer who should be a senior officer of the Office of Naval Officer Procurement.

There shall be at least one such committee in each State, and in States wherein there is more than one Office of Naval Officer Procurement, there shall be at least one such committee for each office. The civilians on these committees may be on a contract basis in order that the Navy shall have some directive power over their time.

j. Accepted candidates under 18 years of age shall be enlisted in class V-12, United States Naval Reserve by the Office of Naval Officer Procurement and placed on inactive duty until they are ordered to college. Candidates over 18 years of age shall be inducted under selective-service procedures and then enlisted into the Naval Reserve, class V-12, by the Office of Naval Officer Procurement and placed on inactive duty or furlough without pay until ordered to college. Students will enter colleges in three groups in July, November of 1943 and March 1944.

k. Service and health records on each accepted candidate shall be retained in the Office of Naval Officer Procurement until transferred with the candidate when ordered to active duty. Enlistment, or proper portions of induction papers will be forwarded to the Bureau of Naval Personnel for retention in the Procurement Division.

4. Procedures for selection of enlisted reserves and probationary commissioned students

A. V-5 Students

The naval aviation cadet selection boards shall continue to obtain through induction (or enlistment) V-5 candidates up to the total yearly quota. These candidates will be obtained by present methods of selection. From this quota the number authorized to enter the college program will be sent to the Office of Naval Officer Procurement for approval by the selection committees stationed there during the selection period. The papers of those selected will be transferred to the Office of Naval Officer Procurement concerned, and the candidate transferred to class V-12, United States Naval Reserve, in the rating of apprentice seaman, and assigned to colleges at the same time as other V-12 students.

B. V-1 Students

Enrollment of college students in the V-1 program will not be accepted after March 15, 1943, and enrollment may be terminated earlier if quotas are filled. Those students enrolled in this program who are in or have completed the final term of their sophomore year in March 1943, will be given qualifying examinations about April 1, 1943. Other V-1 students will continue their college training until the last half of their sophomore year, at which time they will be given the qualifying examination. The Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel will be responsible for the construction, administration, and scoring of these tests. Based on reports of these tests furnished by the Training Division, the Procurement Division wil assign men to further college training as desired. Those candidates who fail the test will be ordered to general enlisted service on active duty in the Navy. Those who are accepted will be placed on active duty as apprentice seamen, or class V-5, with pay, subsistence, and uniforms, and on July 1, 1943, will be assigned to colleges designated by the Bureau of Naval Personnel, to spend full time in completing their college training. For schedule on continuance of education for V-1 students, see subparagraph d below.

C. V-7 Students Now Enrolled

The present V-7 students who have more than one term to complete for a degree will be placed on active duty and ordered to the various colleges on the same date as the V-12 students. Those V-7 students who have one term or less to complete for a degree may remain on inactive duty in the college which they have been attending. Those V-7 students who have one term or less to complete for a degree and who desire to be placed on active duty, will be placed on active duty but not necessarily in the college which they have been attending.

D. Schedule for V-1 and V-7 Students

(1) V-1 and V-7 students will continue their education on the following schedule:

(a) Students who are selected to complete college training for the purpose of qualifying them for appointment in professional classes of the Naval Reserve will be permitted to complete additional equivalent semesters, so that upon graduation they will have completed a total number of semesters as follows:

| | Total semesters |
|---|---|
| Chaplains | 12 |
| Medical and dental | 12 |
| Engineer specialists | 8 |

(b) Students who are selected for training to qualify them for engineers for general duty, deck, supply, or Marine Corps general duty will be permitted to complete additional equivalent semesters as follows:

Those who had on July 1 completed 7 semesters will receive 1 additional semester.

Those who had on July 1 completed 6 semesters will receive 1 additional semester.

Those who had on July 1 completed 5 semesters will receive 2 additional semesters.

Those who had on July 1 completed 4 semesters will receive 2 additional semesters.

Those who had on July 1 completed 3 semesters will receive 3 additional semesters.

Those who had on July 1 completed 2 semesters will receive 3 additional semesters.

Those who had on July 1 completed 1 semester will receive 4 additional semesters.

(2) Engineer reservists following the specialist program, regardless of the number of equivalent semesters completed on July 1, 1943, will be allowed to continue their college training at institutions designated by the Navy until they have completed a total of eight equivalent semesters since matriculation.

(3) Course requirements in the V–1 and V–7 programs were stated in the Navy announcement of March 1, 1942, in general terms only. It is impossible, therefore, for the Bureau of Naval Personnel to specify the completion programs in detail. The Bureau will, however, require that V–1 and V–7 reservists complete the following minimum programs for the several classifications by the end of their college training:

Minimum requirements to be completed in college

[V–1, accredited college program; V–7, college juniors and seniors]

| Type of service | Candidates for eventual commission in classification | Subject | Required minimum length of course [1] |
|---|---|---|---|
| a. Deck (general service) and preaviation. | D–V (S) | English | 1 year. |
| | D–V (G) | Mathematics | 1 year, including completion of trigonometry. |
| | C–V (S) and A–V (N), SC–V (G) except engineering drawing not required. | Physics | 1 year, including laboratory. |
| | | Engineering drawing | ½ year. |
| | | Navigation | Desirable. |
| b. Engineering (general service). | E–V (G) | English | 1 year. |
| | | Mathematics | Through trigonometry. |
| | | Physics | 1 year. |
| | | Chemistry | Do. |
| | | Engineering drawing | Do. |
| | | Elementary heat-power engineering. | Desirable. |
| | | Navigation | Do. |
| c. Engineering specialists (mechanical engineering). | E–V (S), O–V (S), and A–V (S), CC–V (S). | English | 1 year. |
| | | Mathematics | Through integral calculus. |
| | | Physics | 1 year, including laboratory. |
| | | Chemistry | Do. |
| | | Analytic mechanics and strength of materials. | 1 year. |
| | | Hydraulics | ½ year. |
| | | Kinematics and machine design | 1 year. |
| | | Thermodynamics | ½ year. |
| | | Heat-power engineering (steam) | ½ year, including laboratory. |
| | | Internal combustion | Do. |
| | | Electrical engineering [1] | 1 year. |
| d. Engineering specialists (electrical engineering power). | E–V (S), O–V (S) | English | 1 year. |
| | | Mathematics | Through integral calculus. |
| | | Physics | 1 year, including laboratory. |
| | | Analytic mechanics and strength of materials. | 1 year. |
| | | Heat power | ½ year, |
| | | Direct and alternating currents | 1 year. |
| | | Electrical machinery, D. C. and A. C. | Do. |
| e. Engineering specialists (electrical engineering, communications, and ultrahigh frequency). | E–V (S), O–V (S), A–V (S). | English | Do. |
| | | Mathematics | Through linear differential equations. |
| | | Physics | 1 year, including laboratory. |
| | | Direct and alternating currents | 1 year. |
| | | Electronics and high-frequency circuits. | Do. |
| f. Engineering specialists (Civil Engineering Corps). | CEC–V (S) | English | Do. |
| | | Mathematics | Through integral calculus. |
| | | Physics | One year including laboratory. |
| | | Analytic mechanics and strength of materials. | 1 year. |
| | | Structures | Do. |
| | | Hydraulics | ½ year. |
| | | Surveying | 1 year. |
| | | Heat-power | ½ year. |
| | | Electrical engineering | Do. |
| | | Highways | Do. |
| | | Sanitary engineering | Do. |
| g. Medical and Dental Corps. | MC–V (S) and DC–V (S). | English | 1 year. |
| | | Chemistry, including inorganic, qualitative, and organic. | 2 years. |
| | | Physics | 1 year, including laboratory. |
| | | Biology (½ year to be zoology) | Do. |
| | | French or German | 2 years (school) or college. |

[1] A minimum year course is considered to be the equivalent of a course meeting 3 class-hours per week for at least 30 weeks.

E. Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps Students

(1) All members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps who are enlisted in class V–1 will be ordered to active duty about July 1, 1943, concurrently with those students who are enlisted in the V–12 program. Although on active duty, they will continue their Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps training as at present until they have completed their advanced course. While on active duty, they will receive the pay and allowances of an apprentice seaman.

(2) Members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps who are not enlisted in class V–1 may make application for appointment as reserve midshipmen prior to April 1, 1943. If accepted, they will be ordered to inactive duty and will continue their Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps training at their own expense until about July 1, or when the V–12 program becomes effective.

(3) All members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduating before July 1, 1943, will be commissioned as ensigns in the United States Naval Reserve. Those who sever their connection with their college before July 1, 1943, will be discharged from the Naval Reserve, or at their own request, be ordered to active duty in an enlisted status. Those who maintain their connection, in good standing, but do not graduate before July 1, 1943, will be transferred to class V–12 as apprentice seamen, and will be ordered to active duty as outlined in subparagraph (1) above.

(4) The V–12 program is expected to be placed in effect approximately July 1, 1943. As presently planned, this program contemplates the continued existence of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps in substantially the same manner as at present. It is believed that present staffs and facilities are adequate to administer and handle any changes which may be brought about through the operation of the V–12 program.

(5) Commencing on approximately March 1, 1944, candidates for the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps will be obtained from apprentice seamen, class V–12, who have previously completed the first 2 4-month semesters of instruction in the V–12 program. Those candidates who are enrolled in the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps are then expected to continue their training as members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps for 4 additional 4-month semesters. This training will require a total of 2 calendar years.

(6) Although those members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps will be on active duty as apprentice seamen, class V–12, they will continue to be uniformed as hitherto.

(7) At present the curriculum is divided into a basic and an advanced course. Commencing as above, inasmuch as all enrollees will have previously received two basic semesters of general instruction under the V–12 program, they will immediately enter into their Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps training. Beginning as above, the instruction will no longer be referred to as "basic course" and "advanced course," but will be combined and designated as Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps course. The curriculum for this course will be revised to include the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps instruction not previously covered during the first 2 semesters of the V–12 program. Additional subject matter will be included if considered necessary by this bureau. A copy of the finished curriculum for the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps course will be forwarded to the Professor of Naval Science and Tactics prior to November 1, 1943.

(8) For purposes of administration, the members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps who have been secured through the V–12 program will be divided into two classes:

(a) Those who are receiving instruction for the first two semesters will be designated second classmen, and

(b) Those receiving instruction for the last two semesters will be designated first classmen.

(9) Members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps will receive the same pay and allowances, medical services, etc., as all other apprentice seamen, class V–12, on active duty.

(10) Present members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps will receive the same instruction as originally planned on the accelerated schedule.

F. Enlisted Reserve Corps Students (Students Who Were Enrolled in the Basic Course, Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps, Because of Required Military Training at Institution)

When other members of the Enlisted Reserve Corps are called to active service, those in the above category who have requested assignment to the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard will, if qualified and accepted by the Navy, be enlisted in the V–1 program and handled in accordance with paragraph b above.

G. Present Probationary Commissioned Students

When the V–12 program goes into effect, students now holding probationary commissions in the United States Naval Reserve, on inactive duty in a deferred status, will be permitted to resign and accept assignment to the V–12 program as apprentice seamen on active duty without meeting the age requirements specified for civilians entering this program. At the satisfactory completion of their prescribed professional education, they will be again commissioned in the United States Naval Reserve, if physically qualified.

5. Procedures for Selection of Enlisted Men Now on Duty

A. General Considerations

(1) A quota (total 10,000) will be assigned to the enlisted personnel of the Navy. Increments of this quota will be assigned to the main distribution commands listed below.

(2) The assignment of these quotas will be on a percentage basis of the total 10,000 based on the number of personnel shown to be on hand by the latest composite reports of the large distribution commands. The quotas assigned to shore activities will be reduced by 20 percent to equalize the effect of personnel on shore who are not physically qualified for sea duty, and to favor men serving at sea.

(3) Enlisted men will be ordered to report in three groups so as to permit an even flow into the schools which will be beginning semesters in July, November of 1943, and March of 1944.

(4) Individual enlisted men meeting the qualifications listed below may apply for this college program on an application blank which shall be comparable to the one used by enlisted men in applying for a commissioned rank. Approved applications will be forwarded by the commanding officer directly to the large distribution commands. Commanding officers will indicate the priority in which men under their command are recommended. These commands will select the proper number of men to fill the increment of the quota assigned to them by the Bureau. The applications of these successful candidates will be forwarded to the Bureau of Naval Personnel (Procurement Division).

(5) At the proper time the men will be ordered to report to the various colleges as directed by the Bureau of Naval Personnel. Those men who have not taken the general classification test will be ordered via the nearest district command where they will be given the general classification test or a comparable screening test designated by the Bureau of Naval Personnel. Those passing this test will be ordered to the several colleges. Those not passing the test will be returned to general detail.

(6) Enlisted personnel selected for this training will be retained in their existing branch of service whether United States Navy or United States Naval Reserve, and those who fail to successfully complete the program and receive commissions in the Naval Reserve will be restored to general service in their former ratings.

B. Assignment of Quotas

Quotas will be assigned to the following commands who will choose the proper number of personnel from the applications forwarded directly to them by the commanding officers to fill the necessary increment of the total quotas.

(1) Commander Service Force, Pacific Fleet, Subordinate Command.

(a) For all activities for whom he distributes personnel in accordance with reference (a), Bu. Pers. Cir. Ltr. No. 154–42.

(2) Commander Service Force, Atlantic Fleet, Subordinate Command.

(a) For all activities for whom he distributes personnel in accordance with reference (a), Bu. Pers. Cir. Ltr. No. 154–42.

(3) Commander Southeast Pacific Force.

(a) For all ships and outlying stations under his command.

(4) Commandant, Fifteenth Naval District.

(a) For all Districts and Panama Sea Frontier Force activities.

(5) Commandants of all Naval Districts in the continental limits of the United States, and the Commandant of the Potomac and Severn River Naval Commands.

(a) For all activities within the boundaries of their respective commands not included in (1) and (2) above, whether or not they distribute personnel to them in accordance with Bu. Pers. Cir. Ltr. No. 154–42.

NOTE.—Special instructions will be issued to the Commandants concerning prorating quotas to recruits at naval training stations, men on general detail, armed guard personnel under instruction in service schools, United States Navy construction training centers, etc., to afford availability of this plan to the maximum number of personnel in a transitory status.

(b) Assignment of quotas will be on a percentage basis, 10,000 total, based on the number of personnel shown by latest composite reports of activities listed above, except that numbers reported in shore activities will be reduced by 20 percent to equalize the effects of personnel on shore who are not physically qualified for sea duty. Men selected will be sent to school in 3 increments of one-third of the total quota, each 4 months. The first increment will be supplied by July 1, 1943, and each additional increment 4 months thereafter.

C. Coast Guard and Marine Corps

(1) The quota for the Coast Guard will be filled by taking 450 enlisted men to be selected by them and the remaining 270 to be taken from civilian sources.

(2) The quota for the Marine Corps will be 1,000 from enlisted sources and 2,500 from civilian sources.

(3) These quotas will be included in the total Navy quotas.

IV. ARRANGEMENTS WITH COLLEGES

Contracts with the institutions will provide for training, housing, feeding, and medical service.

The contract with the institution will insure a definite minimum number of men. Students may or may not be housed in groups, depending upon local conditions. It is the responsibility of the institution to see that satisfactory feeding and housing is maintained. Contracts with the institutions will cover the cost of same.

A cooperating institution will be required to accept men ordered to it for training. At the same time, each institution will be expected to maintain high standards of selectivity in examinations, instructions, etc., and to recommend transfer to other duty of students who fail to meet those standards.

V. ADMINISTRATION AND PROGRAM AT THE COLLEGES

All administration of the program at the colleges will be under the cognizance of the Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

1. Administration

All units of the program will be under the command of commanding officers. Such commanding officers will be under the jurisdiction of the district commandants with respect to purely military matters only. They will report to the Chief of Naval Personnel. The size of the administrative staffs assigned to the colleges will depend upon the number of enlisted men attached. Where the number so warrants, this staff will include a commanding officer and the necessary executive staff plus a disbursing officer and medical officer (or pharmacist mate). The latter two will be necessary in order to provide for issue of uniforms, monthly pay, allotments, insurance, etc., and vaccinations, inoculations, hospitalization, with suitable entries on health records. Chief specialists will be provided for physical training and indoctrination.

2. Curricula

The Training Division will prescribe the curricula which are necessary to insure production of officer material for the various branches of naval service, including aviation cadets, engineer and deck officers, engineer specialists, medical and dental officers, Supply Corps officers, and chaplains. Curricula will vary in length, depending on training requirements. The length of course for chaplains, medical and dental officers will be twelve 16-week terms, engineering specialists eight 16-week terms, engineering for general duty six 16-week terms, deck and marine line officers four 16-week terms, and aviators two 16-week terms.

There will be three 16-week terms in each calendar year. Courses for the first two 16-week terms, or the equivalent, will be similar for all students except premedical and predental (for these students, chemistry and foreign languages are substituted for English and history) and will emphasize fundamental college work in mathematics, science, English, history, engineering drawing, and physical training. All students inducted in the V–12 program will receive instruction in naval organization and general naval orientation. The amount of time devoted to this work will not exceed three classes per week during the first two semesters.

Outlines of all curricula will be prepared by the Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel, with such assistance as may be required from representative educators or educational societies.

If the college is satisfied that the student has adequately covered any of the subjects included in the curricula, proper substitutes will be permitted.

3. Discipline

Discipline and separation from the training program will be handled as follows:

(1) Minor matters of internal discipline (such as demerits, etc.) will be administered locally by the commanding officer of the school.

(2) Separation from the program (not from the service) for disciplinary reasons will be accomplished only by the Bureau of Naval Personnel (Officer Discipline Section) and all such cases will be referred to the Bureau by the commanding officer of the school. They will then be referred to the Officer Discipline Section via the Training Division.

(3) The extent of the disciplinary action in subparagraph (2) above is to drop a man from the officer candidate program. When this is done, the man automatically reverts to ordinary enlisted status, and is available for assignment to general service or further disciplinary action. Such further disciplinary action, such as mast punishments, courts martial, or separation from the service, is solely the responsibility of the established Enlisted Discipline Section of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

(4) Cases warranting separation from the officer candidate program for scholastic reasons, as reported by the faculty of the college or as reported by naval personnel as the result of screening tests, will be referred to the Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel by the commanding officer of the school for action, and that division will decide the disposition of the cases.

4. Physical training

A. Compulsory

Will be given to all enlisted students in the form of physical drills, swimming, and setting-up exercises to be limited to several hours per week.

B. Voluntary

Enlisted students under the V–12 Program will be permitted to take part in all college athletics and other activities of the campus on the same basis as civilian students insofar as it does not interfere with their prescribed hours or courses of study.

5. Extracurricular activities (other than physical, covered above)

Students will be permitted to participate in college extracurricular activities the same as civilian students insofar as it does not interfere with their prescribed hours or courses of study.

6. Liberty

Insofar as possible, enlisted students will be required to maintain the Navy's standard of discipline. Military activities will be kept to a minimum and will be subordinated, consistent with necessary military supervision, to academic training.

7. Pay and allowances

As mentioned under Administration above, a disbursing officer will be provided to one or a group of colleges, depending on the number of enlisted students and location. All students will be encouraged to make substantial allotments for insurance and Government bonds as it is considered desirable for them to inaugurate systematic financial habits at an early phase in their naval career, and will further limit their spending money to an amount not detrimental to their training.

8. Fraternities

Enlisted students will be allowed to join all previously established organizations or fraternities on the campus already in existence and available to all students on the same terms. They will not be permitted to establish or join any activity or organization not available to membership to all students either civilian or enlisted on the campus or which might be inimical to naval interests.

VI. ASSIGNMENT AT COMPLETION OF TRAINING

1. Upon satisfactory completion of college training, all students may be assigned to appropriate specialized training in the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard.

2. If found qualified upon completion of this specialized training, students will be commissioned in the appropriate Reserve.

VII. DIVISION OF RESPONSIBILITIES FOR PROGRAM

1. The Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel will have cognizance of:

a. Provision of schools and facilities.

b. Selection of teaching staffs.

c. Curricula and methods of instruction.

d. Examination of achievement.

The Training Division will give achievement examinations at the end of the first two terms. The result of these examinations will be used in determining further assignments.

e. Reporting to Procurement Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel all necessary information concerning the progress and status of individuals, and recommending to the procurement division action such as advancement, appointment, etc.

2. The Procurement Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel is responsible for decisions as to:

a. Enrollment.

b. Call to active duty and subsequent orders.

c. Appointment and commissioning as recommended by the Training Division of the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

SUFFRAGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—ADDRESS BY JAMES R. KIRKLAND

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an address delivered by James R. Kirkland, a prominent attorney of the District of Columbia, and chairman of the District of Columbia Bar Association, before the Central Business Association on February 11. In his remarks Mr. Kirkland discusses intelligently and concisely some of the problems of District residents—I should like to say "District citizens," but that is almost satirical, considering the treatment accorded the good Americans who make their homes in the National Capital.

I endorse fully Mr. Kirkland's statement that—

In this day when America is bringing liberty to all the people of the world, it is shameful that she neglects the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Without in any way seeming critical of the efforts of many Americans who are insisting that Britain give the people of India the right to run their own government, I am suggesting that before we take on the Indian problem of the British Empire, these good people should first free the people who reside in the District of Columbia.

These Americans are taxed without representation. They are drafted into the armed services without representation. Thousands of Washingtonians are fighting today on scattered fronts all over the globe, to carry the four freedoms to the people of all the world—except to their own relatives and themselves in the District of Columbia.

I believe thoroughly in our representative form of government. I also believe it should be representative for all American citizens in the United States. I hold that the resident citizens of the District of Columbia should be represented in Congress, should have the right to choose their representatives in Congress, and should also be allowed to participate in the election of President and Vice President.

I again direct the attention of the Senate to Senate Joint Resolution 33, introduced by me, which proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia. It is a companion resolution to that introduced in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HATTON W. SUMNERS of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

I ask that a copy of Senate Joint Resolution 33 be printed at this point as a part of my remarks, to be followed by a copy of the remarks delivered by Mr. Kirkland.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 33

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures of the several States which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States within seven years of the date of its passage, shall be valid as a part of said Constitution, namely:

"The Congress shall have power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President members elected by the people of the District constituting the seat of the government of the United States, in such numbers and with such powers as the Congress shall determine. All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal."

SPEECH BY JAMES R. KIRKLAND BEFORE CENTRAL BUSINESS ASSOCIATION FEBRUARY 11, 1943

I come to you today as the chairman of the District of Columbia Bar Association Committee on Americanization. I also come to you as a citizen and a property holder in the District of Columbia. In this day when America is bringing liberty to all the peoples of the world, it is shameful that she neglects the citizens of the District of Columbia. The four freedoms have transcended the seven seas, but the Atlantic Charter has not yet come to the shores of the Potomac.

It is high time that we Washingtonians should do something about this condition. No greater affront has ever been offered us than the refusal of new Congressmen to serve on the congressional Committee on the District of Columbia. I say that that was an affront. I say also that we have been harping on this matter of suffrage for such a long time that perhaps like Tara's harp it will finally resound through the monumental marble halls of the Federal Government. Let us hope that our parental Federal Government will condescend to give us some means of expressing ourselves and to have some congressional representation in our own affairs.

I am particularly interested in another matter by virtue of an association. My father-in-law, the late Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, former assistant superintendent of the Washington public schools, was probably known to many of you. He did a splendid job, but a neglectful Congress has given us an understaffed and poorly housed educational system. Our children should be educated in a model public-school system which should be a standard for the world.

Our fire and police departments need help. We need more modern fire-fighting equipment and the police department needs more permanent personnel. As a former assistant United States Attorney, I have marveled that the Nation's Capital of approximately 750,000 people is policed by a force of approximately 1,500 patrolmen whose job is to safeguard its citizens and their property and maintain law and order day and night. Undoubtedly the efforts of the auxiliary police have contributed in our present conditions, but we need a much larger and better equipped police department.

We have talked a great deal about local suffrage. We have had many arguments pro and con. We have heard the argument that certain minority classes might control and that politics might be harmful to the administration of the Nation's Capital. However, out of my experience as a public prosecutor and private attorney, I do not think there is a better behaved city in the world and I feel that our efficient citizen associations have shown that we are capable of self-government.

Many suggestions have been made for the approach to complete statehood. Personally, I do not care what approach is made. My idea is to get something started—do something at the present time. I have suggested to friends and I have made public speeches along the same lines, that if Congress feels we are still incapable of self-government, we should at least be entitled to the same badge of honor and dignity in the Halls of Congress as Alaska, Hawaii, and the other territories. We should at least have a congressional Delegate. I urge this because in the constant turn-over of Congress, a Delegate from the District of Columbia could at least be the means of keeping Congress advised of local problems. The Committee on the District of Columbia is constantly in a state of flux. With new Congressmen coming in, fresh ideas being constantly suggested, many congressional policies of great value are cast aside in the biennial turn-over. If we had a Delegate, we would have a clearinghouse for our ideas; we could maintain files of information and data available on all local problems; he could rise and defend our policies on the floor of Congress; he could appear before committees and he could answer interrogatories from the floor of other Members seeking information. In his presence we would have at least a spokesman and consultant for our problems.

My experience in the District of Columbia Bar Association has been that Congress has been slow to make full concessions. I have watched that process carefully in connection with our local courts. I think you can be justly proud of your municipal courts as they are now constituted. They have jurisdiction today in all civil suits up to $3,000. I predict that before long domestic relations will also form a part of their jurisdiction and then the courts will be truly municipal in character and will administer the affairs of our community.

I repeat, let us petition Congress to have at least a congressional delegate. If that idea succeeds, let us petition them further for an elected delegate in both bodies of Congress. A spokesman in each branch would be alert to our opportunities and further our hopes. If their election disputes the contemplated abuses, then I think it would be in order to petition for full suffrage.

I want to compliment your organization; you have been a very progressive body. You have had the best interests of the District of Columbia at heart and you have always done a very good job. I say that you should now put your shoulders to the wheel and push ahead for local suffrage. I am looking forward confidently to the day in the very near future, when we will all be able to say, with the residents of every other State, that we, too, are 100 percent Americans.

MILITARY PREPAREDNESS—ARTICLE BY ARTHUR KROCK

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, those who served in this body before our entry into the war will, I am sure, recall that there was never effective and decisive resistance to serious requests for military preparedness. In fact, Congress was more eager to prepare the country for war than was the executive branch.

The real cleavage of opinion came largely between two groups: First, those who, although realizing the unpreparedness of the United States, thought that the security of our country could be promoted by talk; and second, those who felt that as long as we were unprepared we should indulge in as little threatening talk as possible.

In a recent article in the New York Times the distinguished journalist, Mr. Arthur Krock, makes a definitive contribution to the history of our pre-war period. With facts and figures which are incontestable he shows the desire of Congress to prepare the United States. Let us hope that some day someone will explain equally clearly the fact that many of those who saw with clarity the imminence of war delayed so long in preparing for it.

The best policy for any legislator to follow is that of personal conviction. Whether it puts him into some subtle classification as an interventionist or noninterventionist is entirely immaterial. Honesty of purpose is the important standard involved.

I ask unanimous consent that the article of Mr. Krock be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEFENSE AND WAR FISCAL RECORD OF CONGRESS

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, February 25.—In the skirmishes and battles that are being and will be fought between the President and Congress, one of the causes of which is the forming fourth-term drive, several small and large obstructions to the war program can develop. But the record of Congress for the past 10 years in dealing with Presidential requests for War and Navy Department appropriations offers strong assurance that the sinew of war, which is money, will not be denied any element of growing strength that Congress can provide.

It takes much more than money, of course, to fight and win a war. But money is an indispensable supply. If the United States and Great Britain had diverted much of it into an armament race in the last decade, when the Axis Nations were making ready for the present conflict, the war—as Mr. Dooley could have said—might have been over as soon as it began, if not before. Therefore, the congressional attitude toward defense and war appropriations is comforting to a people about to be afflicted again, and this time in the midst of desperate battle, with the wasting germs of a legislative-executive political conflict that are being incubated by the fourth-term drive.

In the 1933–42 period the record shows that Congress appropriated almost $10,000,000,000 more for the Military Establishment than was asked in the original Presidential budgets during those years, and considerably more than the totals of the first and supplemental Budget estimates. During the same period Congress supplied almost $1,000,000,000 more for the Naval Establishment than the President's original estimates.

THE DEFENSE POLICY SPLIT

There were numerous instances, which there is no space here to recount, when Members of the House and Senate sought to add to the total appropriations. These Members included A and B isolationists and noninterventionists. A isolationists were willing to spend for arms if the arms were to be used in North America; B isolationists and noninterventionists extended their concept of the defense zone of the United States to the Western Hemisphere, and after the collapse of France some of the latter accepted lend-lease as a wise necessity, clinging only to their demand that we keep out of the war.

The attack of the Japanese on Pearl Harbor, followed by the declaration of war against this Nation by the other two Axis Powers, ended the argument and merged the disputants. But it is worth remembering that the argument was not over money to arm the forces of the United States. And there is no reason to think that, except to achieve obvious economies to promote efficiency, Congress will engage in any such argument for the duration.

The subjoined comparison is between the President's original Budget estimates for the last decade and the sums granted by Congress. A considerable part of the difference is accounted for by supplemental Budget requests from the Executive. But it is accurate to say that, as a general rule, and particularly in the last 3 years, Congress has given more to the Military and Naval Establishments than the President sought.

In the following table the first figure is the amount of the original Budget estimates and the second is the amount appropriated, all in millions of dollars:

War Department (1933), $301, $304½; (1934), $280¾, $378; (1935) $289, $292¾; (1936) $320½, $368½; (1937) $391, $420; (1938) $428¾; $514; (1939) $618½, $648; 1940) $869, $879½; (1941) $11,202, $13,469; (1942) $71,723, $75,610. For the current fiscal year the President's first budget was for 39,532 and the House reported favorably on $42,820.

Navy Department (1933), $354½, $334½; (1934) $323½, $572¾; (1935) $295¼, $371½; (1936) $488, 498½; (1937) $561½, 559; (1938) $577½, 588¼; (1939) $579½, $656¾; (1940) $1,028, $1,050; (1941) $4,460, $4,506; (1942) $23,810, $24,085. And for the current fiscal year the congressional bills have already provided for almost a billion more for the Navy than the original estimates.

THE GRAND TOTALS

The grand totals for the period, as affecting the War Department, including the amount reported by the House for 1943, are: $125,962 estimated, $135,642 voted. For the Navy Department the totals are: $46,427 estimated, $47,948 voted.

To further point out the fact that the issue over intervention was not an issue over armament for national defense, it should be noted that Senator LODGE, a noninterventionist, urged compulsory military training some months before the President endorsed it, and is now an ardent supporter of the plan to raise the Army to 8,200,000 officers and men in 1943. Some of his other activities are typical. He voted in 1941 to confine our forces to the Western Hemisphere. But he voted "yes" for 21 percent naval expansion in 1938, for 6,000 versus 5,500 Army planes in 1939, for lend-lease and its $7,000,000,000 appropriation in 1941, for the 18-month extension of military service in 1941, and against the provision to compel 1 year's training of the 18- and 19-year-olds before they could be assigned to combat areas.

TRANSPORTATION OF PETROLEUM BY PIPE LINE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 103) submitted by Mr. CLARK of Missouri (for himself, Mr. REED, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. MOORE, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. BURTON, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. CAPPER) on February 15, 1943, was read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. This resolution is to go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be passed over.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded, and the calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INCREASE IN PAY OF POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 17.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 17) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That any officer or member of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, or the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, whose rate of compensation is governed by the act of July 1, 1930 (Public Law No. 489 of the 71st Cong.), shall be paid additional compensation at a rate of $350 per annum: Provided, That each such employee shall be paid only such additional compensation or portion thereof as will not cause his aggregate compensation to exceed a rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall take effect as of December 1, 1942, and shall remain in effect for the duration of the present war and for 6 months thereafter.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during the month of December last, Congress passed a bill providing for an increase of $300 for each fireman and policeman in service in the District of Columbia. The bill was vetoed by the President, on two specific grounds. One ground was that the bill did not take care of another group in the District, namely, the school teachers. The other ground was that it contained a retroactive feature, that it extended back 1 year. In other words, in the bill passed in December last it was provided that the increases in pay should be retroactive to December 1941. It will be noted that the bill now under consideration provides that the increases shall be retroactive to December 1942 only.

Following the President's veto, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia introduced a bill providing for an increase of pay for the members of the police force and the members of the fire department amounting to $480 a year. As a result of the hearings on the bill, the chairman of the committee changed the amount from $480 a year as the increase for a year to $350 a year for each member of the respective services for the duration of the war. In other words, we reduced the amount provided by the initial bill which was introduced, and set up what we thought was a fair amount of additional pay for the police and fire services for the duration of the war.

We worked the matter out in various ways, but came to the conclusion that a flat sum of $350 for each member would be fair, because by making such provision we would increase the wages in the lower brackets, so that policemen who were receiving only $1,900 a year would receive an increase sufficient to warrant them remaining in the service.

For the enlightenment of the Senate, I wish to present some figures on the subject which I think very much worth while.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he states the figures?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERTON. What was the basis for the increase? Was it recommended because of the increased cost of living?

Mr. McCARRAN. The principal basis is the increased cost of living.

Mr. OVERTON. That is why there is suggested a flat increase of $350 a year for the members of each service?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is a fact, and it is also because of the increased service demanded of the police and fire departments at this time.

Mr. OVERTON. That is equally distributed?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is equally distributed.

Mr. OVERTON. That is why the increases are the same?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. In other words, we believe that those who receive the smaller salaries, namely, $1,900 a year, which is the entrance salary in the police service and the fire service, should be taken care of, because it has been from that element that we have been losing a greater number of policemen and firemen. One thousand nine hundred dollars a year is not sufficient to sustain a family of four people in the District of Columbia, according to the facts and figures presented by the Department of Labor.

In order that Senators may know exactly what will happen if the bill shall become law, let me say that six employees in the police service will receive $4,850. They are now receiving $4,500. Mind you, there are only six in that category. They will receive an increase of 7.5 percent.

Eighteen of the employees now receiving $3,600 will receive $3,950, or an increase of 9.7 percent.

Forty-five of the police force now receiving $3,050 per annum will receive $3,400, or an increase of 11.4 percent.

Sixty-three of the police force now receiving $2,750 will receive $3,100, or an increase of 12.7 percent.

Seven hundred and eighty-eight of the police force now receiving $2,400 will, if the bill shall become law, receive $2,750, or an increase of 14.5 percent.

Sixty-one members of the police force now receiving $2,300 will receive under the proposed law $2,650, or an increase of 15.2 percent.

Fifty-four members of the police force now receiving $2,200 will receive $2,550, or an increase of 15.9 percent.

Eighty-six members of the police force now receiving $2,100 will receive $2,450, or an increase of 16.6 percent.

One hundred and seventy-eight members of the police force receiving $2,000 will, under the proposed law, receive $2,350, or an increase of 17.5 percent.

Three hundred and sixty-three members of the police force of the District of Columbia now receiving $1,900 per annum will receive $2,250, or an increase of 18.4 percent.

The total number of policemen authorized by act of Congress for the District of Columbia is 1,711. According to the figures, there is now a shortage of about 41 privates. There is now a greater shortage in the lower grade, the vacancies in the list of privates being 77. In other words, the quota which is allowed by law cannot be filled, notwithstanding the fact that there is a greater need for police service than ever in the history of Washington. The reason for inability to fill the quota in the lower grade is the entrance salary of $1,900, which extends over the whole year. Therefore, we thought best and we think best that this bill should carry a flat $350 raise for all those receiving as high as $4,500 a year, but in no case would anyone receive in excess of $5,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the bill approved by the District Commissioners?

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill was not approved by the District Commissioners. No bill increasing salaries, with which I have had anything to do, has been approved by the District Commissioners. In answer to the Senator's question I wish to read from the testimony of the Chairman of the District Commissioners before the committee. Mr. Young, Chairman of the District Commissioners, testified in a hearing on this bill, when the bill contained a provision for $480 per annum increase in place of $350 per annum. I read from his testimony:

> The CHAIRMAN. While you are on your feet, Mr. Mayor, will you tell us what you think about this bill?
> Commissioner YOUNG. Well, Senator, it puts me in a very peculiar position, not a very happy one.
> The CHAIRMAN. You testified voluntarily. Now, I can cross-examine you, because you submitted yourself.
> Commissioner YOUNG. Well, I think you easily guess, and every man in the room can guess it doesn't put me in a very pleasant position, because I am very proud of the force. I think I, personally, since I have been on the job, have appointed about 700 of them. That is a pretty large part of the force, and without trying to flatter the major too much—

Referring to Major Kelly—

> I think the force shows a great improvement, to such an extent I think the citizens now are praising it, where, not so many years ago they were critical. The police force has done a great job, and nobody will dispute the fact that they deserve a raise. I wish I could sit right here at this table and sign my name to the money this bill calls for.

That statement was made when the bill carried a provision for an increase of $480 per annum. Commissioner Young then said he wished he could sit at the committee table and sign his name to the increase the bill calls for.

Later on, after the hearings had been held, and upon further consideration, we thought it best to reduce the amount to $350 per annum, a flat allowance to all members of the force then receiving under $4,500 a year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand from the Senator that the Commissioners as a body are opposed to the measure which the Senator is submitting, but are they opposed to any increase in the pay scales?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know that I would be justified in saying they are opposed to any increase, but they have opposed every increase which has been submitted. They opposed the proposal for a $300 increase which was contained in the bill passed by the Senate last December. Senators will find from the RECORD that I stated to the Senate at that time that the Commissioners were opposed to the increase. They oppose the present proposed increase. As between two bills, that is a substitute measure which will be proposed in the Senate, and the one which is offered by the committee, I am advised that the Commissioners favor the substitute. The substitute would raise the salaries of those in the lower brackets $100 per annum, and raise the salaries in the higher brackets $300 per annum. In other words, the substitute bill would give a greater increase to those in the higher brackets, and a lesser increase to those in the lower brackets. Yet it is in the very low brackets where we are losing the men, because they cannot live on the present salaries.

For the further enlightenment of the able Senator from Michigan I wish to read a letter.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Do the Commissioners approve or disapprove the substitute bill or have they made a report in respect to it?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am advised that the Commissioners approve the substitute bill which has been mentioned and which I think the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will present. I have just referred to the substitute, which proposes to give an increase in salary of $100 a year to those in the $1,900-a-year bracket and $300 a year increase to those who are in higher pay brackets.

Mr. OVERTON. May I ask the Senator why the Commissioners approve the substitute bill rather than the original bill? Is it because the substitute bill carries less increase in the aggregate?

Mr. McCARRAN. That would be my conjecture, because the substitute bill carries a maximum of $300 increase in place of $350.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me before the letter to which he referred is read?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am merely seeking information. I do not know what the facts are about the proposed increase, except what the Senator has just said. In the Post Office Department, however, we have a tentative understanding that the employees shall receive an increase of $300 each. I think it is quite generally agreed or understood that that is what the increase will be, and that is acceptable to the employees. I wonder whether it would not be well to make the increase given to employees generally about the same? I am merely suggesting that thought to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall discuss that matter, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read a letter which addresses itself largely to the question propounded by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read as follows:

FALLS CHURCH, VA., January 25, 1943.
Senator PAT MCCARRAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am a private in the Metropolitan Police Department, Washington, D. C. I noticed in the Sunday Star paper where Senator BURTON, of Ohio, is to file another police and fire pay bill in the Senate with the one you have introduced but at a lower scale.

I suppose we all have our ups and downs, so I will give you a few of mine. We have five children and did live in Washington, but cost of living growing so high I thought it best to move out, so moved to Falls Church, Va., which did not reduce our cost of living at all. We live very simple, depriving ourselves and children of many a want. The children spend very little for shows and such things children want, and my wife and myself spend nothing only for necessities. We can't clothe ourselves or children as they should be, but we do have enough to eat even if it is simple food and have to leave off other things. I have tried to save the best I could for war bonds and stamps, but the best we have done is one $25 bond and the children have six or seven dollars each in stamps. We know our country needs all each one can do, so we will do the best we can, but we do have to live. I don't want this letter considered as a complaint but merely a statement of existing conditions.

I'm planning on a garden this spring which will help a lot, but with the high cost of shoes, clothing, foods, and other living experses, it's impossible to live and pay my bills at my present salary.

If we were allowed to do extra work at other places, it would give us a little extra money to pay our bills with. We work many hours overtime, but do not get any pay for it.

I think the bill you introduced is small enough, and will help the whole department a lot even if it does not meet each of our needs, but anything less will just make it that much harder for us to live. There are lots of other men in the Police Department who have as large a family as I, and some larger. So what you can do for the department will be greatly appreciated by my family and myself and lots of other families.

JUST A POLICEMAN.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] propounded a question to me and then was called from the Chamber. He has asked me to defer making answer to his question until he returns, which I will gladly do.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] a moment ago raised the question of the cost of living in the District of Columbia. The cost of living is somewhat connected with the question propounded by the Senator from Tennessee. In other words, it will not do to compare the cost of living in the District of Columbia with the cost of living elsewhere, because it is higher in the District of Columbia than it is in any other comparable city in the United States.

I beg leave to read an article from the local press which carries confirmation of my last statement. The article is headed:

District cost of living rises 7½ percent in a year.

The article continues—

District living costs advanced 0.3 percent between December 15 and January 15, as compared with an average rise of 0.2 percent in other large cities during the same period and now are 7.5 percent higher than a year ago and 19.8 percent above the level of December 15, 1940—

I draw that especially to the attention of those who are interested in this subject, and I repeat what the article states, that District living costs now are 19.8 percent above the level of December 15, 1940—

the Labor Department reported today—

This was just a few days ago—

Food costs in the District increased 0.8 percent during the month, and fuel, electricity, and ice 1.9 percent. Prices of clothing and housefurnishings dropped fractionally, while costs of miscellaneous items remained unchanged. As an economy measure, the Labor Department made no survey of rents in January.

The January advance brought the District cost of living index to 119.4 percent of the 1935–39 average.

That is a matter which takes the consideration of the pay which should be given to the policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia out of the category of comparison with any other city in the country. The reason for that is obvious. There has been an influx of hundreds of thousands of people into the District. In Washington we have the greatest pay roll of any city in all the world, and the cost of living is constantly increasing. The cost of living is so high that it will absorb any increase in pay. That appears to me to be one of the reasons for the continuation of the high cost of living in the District.

I do not like to touch upon a phase of the subject which would be in answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] until he has returned to the Chamber. However, I will say that we cannot compare the pay of policemen or members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia with that of members of the Postal Service because the pay received by those engaged in the Postal Service is governed by the Nation-wide cost of living, whereas the pay of men who work in the Police and Fire Departments of the District of Columbia is governed by a cost of living which is entirely localized and belongs entirely to the city of Washington.

Let me say further, in answer to the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, that I have in my hand a report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States which dwells upon the increased cost of living in the various cities. Leaving out the fractions, I read from the table, as follows:

Atlanta, total, $1,556; food, $609; clothing, $197; housing, $291; fuel and light, $96; furniture, furnishings, and household equipment, $36.

Going through a long list, we come to the city of Washington.

We find the cost of living in Washington to be the highest in the United States for a four-person manual worker's family at maintenance level as defined by the Work Projects Administration.

The total is $1,731; food, $622; clothing, $220; housing, $352; fuel and light, $119; furniture, furnishings, household equipment, $44; miscellaneous, $372.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the entire table, because it deals with the subject under discussion.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—Estimated[1] cost of living for a 4-person manual worker's family at maintenance level as defined by the Work Projects Administration,[2] in 33 large cities as of Sept. 15, 1942

Mr. McCARRAN. I return again to the reason for the proposed increase to employees of the fire department and the police department, which question was raised by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

On February 23, 1942, the Secretary of Labor reported on continuing studies made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. I read some of the high lights of the Secretary's report.

In the 8 months from May 12, 1942, to January 12, 1943, the national average cost of all foods rose 9.4 percent.

On January 12 the national index of food costs stood 33 percent above the 1935–39 averages, and 14 percent above the figures for 1942. Prices of clothing and household furnishings of the type purchased by wage earners and lower-salaried workers in large cities of the United States have skyrocketed amazingly.

In the field of men's clothing the Secretary of Labor reports that between September 15, 1939, and January 15, 1943, the price of work trousers increased over 37 percent.

The price of cotton overalls increased over 47 percent. The price of cotton work shirts increased over 51 percent. Other price increases for specific articles of men's clothing were:

Business shirts, 30 percent; street shoes, 28 percent; work shoes, 32 percent; topcoats, 32 percent; overcoats, 20 percent; wool suits, 30 percent.

In the field of home furnishings the following increases were reported: Inexpensive living-room suites, 40 percent; medium bedroom suites, 24 percent; sheets, 52 percent; wool blankets, 23 percent.

These figures are averages for 21 large cities of the United States, but they are probably to be considered an index of average price changes in Washington as indicated by the fact that the average change in the cost of all goods purchased by wage earners and lower-salaried workers in the 21 cities between September 1939 and January 1943 was 19.8 percent, which is exactly the same percentage rise reported for goods of the same grades during the same period in Washington, D. C.

I do not desire to detain the Senate. I was hoping that the Senator from Tennessee would return to the Chamber. I must now dwell upon the question which he propounded, namely, In view of the fact there is a proposal to increase the pay of postal workers by a flat $300 per annum, would it not be well to have a uniform increase of $300? A portion of my last statement was in answer to that very proposal.

The increased cost of living in the District of Columbia is far in excess of what it is in other cities of the country. Pay raises for postal employees, if granted by Congress, will be covered in legislation concerned only with that subject.

Why should the provisions of Senate bill 17 affect the provisions of Senate bill 360? If one bill affects the other, it must be clear that the two bills interact.

As presently drawn, Senate bill 360 grants a flat increase of $300 to postal employees throughout the Nation. The cost-of-living index for the Nation is lower than for the District of Columbia. It is not the contention of the proponents of the committee amendment to Senate bill 17 that action taken in behalf of postal employees should even be considered by the Senate in connection with its deliberations on Senate bill 17; but if this claim is made by the proponents of the minority substitute for Senate bill 17, then they must accept the logical conclusion that if postal employees are entitled to a flat increase of $300 on the basis of the Nation-wide cost-of-living index, then the higher cost-of-living index in the District of Columbia justifies a flat increase greater than $300 for policemen and firemen in the District. It should be stressed that whereas Senate bill 360 provides an increase of $300 for postal employees in the lower salary grades, Senate bill 17 would give the policemen and firemen of the District in the lowest salary grades an increase of $350. The proposed minority substitute for Senate bill 17 would limit police and fire department employees in the District in the lower salary grades to an increase of only $100 a year, which is barely 5 percent above their present rates of pay.

As I understand, the difference between the substitute which will be offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the bill which has been reported by the committee is a difference of $50. The substitute would give an increase of $100 a year to the lowest paid in the service.

Mr. President, the lowest paid are the ones who suffer the most. The person who wrote the letter to the chairman of the District Committee is a man with a family of four, including himself. He can scarcely get along on $1,900. Many are refusing to take service in the District of Columbia police force because $1,900 per annum is not a living wage under the existing cost of living in the District.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I apologize to the Senator from Tennessee. I delayed the answer to his question as long as I thought I could. I will state it again if the Senator cares to hear it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should be glad to have the Senator from Nevada do so. I should like, however, to make a further statement.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee make his statement now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to do so.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads came to the conclusion that a flat increase of $300 for postal employees was probably the best way to solve the problem. The increased cost of living is given as the reason for the increase, is it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Nevada to that extent.

What I rose to say is that I believe it would be better if our action on all these matters were as nearly uniform as possible, making the increases about the same. I submit that suggestion for the Senator's consideration.

I do not know the situation in the District, and I cannot speak with regard to it. However, I think we should give the employees of the Government whose living expenses have risen a reasonable increase. We did so during the last war, and we might well do so in the present war. We are doing so now, and should continue to do so after the 1st of April.

Mr. McCARRAN. At the hazard of repetition, because of my very high regard for the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee, and because he is chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which has in hand the matter of an increase in pay for employees of the Postal Service, I desire to read an article published quite recently in the local press, and which is correct:

District living costs advanced 0.3 percent between December 15 and January 15, as compared with an average rise of 0.2 percent in other large cities during the same period, and now are 7.5 percent higher than a year ago and 19.8 percent above the level of December 15, 1940, the Labor Department reported today.

Food costs in the District increased 0.8 percent during the month, and fuel, electricity, and ice 1.9 percent. Prices of clothing and house furnishings dropped fractionally, while costs of miscellaneous items remained unchanged. As an economy measure, the Labor Department made no survey of rents in January.

The January advance brought the District cost-of-living index to 119.4 percent of the 1935–39 average.

During the single month between December 15, 1942, and January 15, 1943, the cost of food in Washington rose eight-tenths of 1 percent, or at the rate of approximately 10 percent a year. Only 6 of the 21 major cities showed greater percentage increase in the cost of food. During the same month, the cost of fuel, electricity and ice in Washington increased 1.9 percent (at the rate of approximately 23 percent per year). This was the second largest increase reported among the 21 major cities of the country.

On January 15, 1943, the cost of food in Washington stood approximately 34 percent above the 1935–39 average. The cost of clothing in Washington was approximately 32 percent above the 1935–39 average. The cost of house furnishings stood exactly 29 percent above the 1935–39 average.

I dwell on that in answer to the Senator's observation that it is not fair to judge what should be a proper pay increase for the employees of the District of Columbia on the basis of what the Senator may find to be a proper increase for a group which extends around the United States; because the cost of living in the District of Columbia, as shown by the figures quoted—figures taken from reports by the Department of Labor—is far out of line with the cost of living in any other comparable city in the United States. I dwell on the matter for another reason, as well: I think comparisons are not fair; but if we were to make comparisons at all, there is no comparison between the groups with which we are dealing and the postal employees group. The police force in the District of Columbia—especially in the District of Columbia, where the police force has been cut down yearly—is now some 77 men short because of inability to get a sufficient number of men to serve at the salary we are paying them, and in the District the police force is called upon for greater activity and greater service than it ever before has been called upon, or for which the police force in any other city is called upon at the present time. Generally speaking, it is not fair to compare a policeman's salary with that of any other Federal employee, because a policeman on duty has no fixed hours of labor. He must remain on duty; he is subject to call at all times. The same statement applies to a fireman. Even though a policeman or a fireman may have a day off, he is subject to call at all times, and must stand by and hold himself in readiness. That situation does not prevail with reference to any Federal services other than the Police Department and the Fire Department; and of course I am dealing now entirely with the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not propose to disagree with the Senator as to much that he says. I do not know that I shall disagree with him at all. There is a great deal to be said in favor of the position he takes. I desire to ask the Senator if he has any figures showing how much more the cost of living has increased in Washington than it has elsewhere in the entire country generally. If he has figures of that kind, it seems to me they would be helpful to us in this matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope that the information I have at hand, and which I have prepared along the very line of the Senator's request, may help enlighten the Senator in that respect.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should be very glad to have the information. I should think that it might be very helpful to have a comparison between the general average throughout the country, outside the metropolitan district of Washington, and the situation in Washington.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me state something which may assist in that connection: In the city of Baltimore, the starting salary for a policeman is $1,825. The top salary is $2,086. The increase between 1938 and 1942 was $255. The increase for the top salary was $296. That is the increase between those years.

So at present the initial salary is $2,080, and the top salary is $2,382. The living cost differential between Washington and Baltimore is $151; that is to say, the cost in Washington is $151 higher than in Baltimore.

In Boston, another comparable city, the starting salary is $1,600. The top salary is $2,100. There, as in the city of Washington, the police force has had no increase for many years. The differential between the cost of living in Boston and the cost of living in Washington is $60, the lesser cost being in Boston.

In Buffalo the differential in the cost of living is $173.

In Cincinnati the differential is $130.

In Cleveland the differential is $86.

In Detroit the differential is $45.

In Los Angeles the differential is $157.

In Milwaukee the differential is $117.

In Minneapolis the differential is $109.

In Newark the differential—closest to that of Washington—is $9.

In New Orleans the differential is $211.

In Philadelphia the differential is $161.

In Pittsburgh the differential is $125.

In St. Louis the differential is $100.

In San Francisco the differential is $14.

In Kansas City the differential is $264.

In most of the cities I have named an increase has been given within the past few years to the members of the police force; whereas, as a matter of fact, since 1930 no increase has been accorded to those serving in the police service in the District of Columbia.

I shall not detain the Senate longer on this matter, because I take it that the Senator from Ohio, in opposition to a $50 item in the increase, will present his proposal in line with the minority views.

Let me say to the Senate that approximately a year ago hearings were held in the House on the matter of an increase of $300 for the members of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia. The bill came to the Senate, was referred to the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and was held in that committee until late in the year. Then it was reported to the Senate, and finally was passed by the Senate and passed by the other body, but was vetoed by the President. The reasons for his veto were, not that he did not favor an increase in pay for the members of the police force and fire department but rather that the bill left out a great group of employees in the District of Columbia—namely, the teachers—and, rather, because it carried a provision that the increase should be retroactive for 1 full year—namely, from December 1942 to December 1941.

In other words, if the bill had been signed by the President and had become law, instead of having received the President's veto, those who would have received the increase would have received it from December 1941.

The present bill is retroactive only to December 1942.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the whole thought on the subject must center on the practical application. There is authorization whereby the District of Columbia can have seventeen-hundred-odd policemen. However, it is impossible to obtain 1,700; and today there are only approximately 1,600 policemen in the District of Columbia. The turn-over during a year is about 500. The reason for that is that the men are lured away to cities where they receive better wages, where there are better living conditions, where the cost of living is lower, and where the wages are higher. So they will not stay here even for 1 full year or for 2 years. They even give up the security incident to their jobs here in order to go to places where wages are higher.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Senator's position is that, assuming, let us say, that a general increase of $300 for post office employees, for instance, is a fair and just increase, and that an additional $50, or an increase of $350, for the police force of the District of Columbia would be in substantial line with the $300 increase for postal employees throughout the country, the difference between the cost of living in Washington and in other places throughout the remainder of the country would about take care of the difference of $50 in favor of the policemen, according to the Senator's bill. Is that an approximately correct statement of the Senator's argument?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is one way of stating it. I think it could be stated in another way, and yet carry the same thought. The cost of living in the District of Columbia is much higher than it is in other places. I do not stand on the position that $300 is sufficient for Postal Service employees; I am inclined to believe—and I am very emphatic in my belief—that they should receive much more than $300. I do not say that $350 is a fair increase for the District police and the District firemen. I do not think it is fair; I think it should be more. I introduced a bill to provide an increase of $480 a year, but I was convinced from the hearings and from the conditions precedent that I could not get that bill through, however just the $480 increase was, however right it was, however fair it was. So, in order to get through what I thought was merely partially fair and partially reasonable, I changed the bill so as to provide an increase of $350.

If $300 is fair for the Postal Service employees, then, indeed, the members of the police department and of the fire department of the District of Columbia should have far more than $350, and $50 is little enough as a differential between the two classes of services, in view of the cost of living within the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point, amplifying the statement I have made, a chart showing the amount of salary increase, 1938–42, to police departments and fire departments in various cities of the country.

I also ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a chart from which I read showing the differential in the cost of living in the various cities.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit the matter to the Senate on the presentation I have made.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION, ETC., OF DISABLED MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND THOSE DISABLED IN WAR INDUSTRIES—NOTICE

Mr. BURTON obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement for the information of Senators.

It had been my intention, after conferring with the majority leader, to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 180 when the pending business had been disposed of. I am now informed that there is a second bill which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] desires to have taken up, and also that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a measure which he wishes to bring before the Senate. After having conferred with the senior Senator from Kentucky and others I have decided to defer making a motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 180 until Thursday next, at which time, as soon as I am able to secure recognition following the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall make the motion which I had intended to make today.

INCREASE IN PAY OF POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 17) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] are detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is necessarily absent because of illness.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

That Public Law No. 489 of the Seventy-first Congress (S. 1370), approved July 1, 1930, is hereby amended for and during the period in which this act shall be in effect by suspending sections 1, 2, and 3 thereof, and inserting in place thereof the following new sections:

"SECTION 1. That the annual basic salaries of the officers and members of the Metropolitan Police, the United State Park Police, and the White House Police shall be as follows: Major and superintendent, $8,000; assistant superintendents, $5,000 each; inspectors, $4,500 each; captains, $3,900 each; lieutenants, $3,350 each; sergeants, $3,050 each; privates, a basic salary of $2,000 per year with an annual increase of $140 in salary for 5 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,700 is reached. All original appointments of privates shall be made at the basic salary of $2,000 per year, and the first year of service shall be probationary.

"SEC. 2. That the annual basic salaries of the officers and members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia shall be as follows: Chief engineer, $8,000; deputy chief engineers, $5,000 each; battalion chief engineers, $4,500 each; fire marshal, $5,000; deputy fire marshal, $3,300; inspectors, $2,760 each; captains, $3,300 each; lieutenants, $3,140 each; sergeants, $2,900 each; superintendent of machinery, $5,000; assistant superintendent of machinery, $3,300; pilots, $2,900 each; marine engineers, $2,900 each; assistant marine engineers, $2,760 each; marine firemen, $2,400 each; privates, a basic salary of $2,000 per year with an annual increase of $140 in salary for 5 years or until a maximum salary of $2,700 is reached. All original appointments of privates shall be made at the basic salary of $2,000 per year, and the first year of service shall be probationary.

"SEC. 3. That privates of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, and the White House Police, and privates of the Fire Department shall be entitled to the following salaries: Privates who have served less than 1 year, at the rate of $2,000 per annum; privates who have served more than 1 year and less than 2 years, at the rate of $2,140 per annum; privates who have served more than 2 years and less than 3 years, at the rate of $2,280 per annum; privates who have served more than 3 years and less than 4 years, at the rate of $2,420 per annum; privates who have served more than 4 years and less than 5 years, at the rate of $2,560 per annum; privates who have served more than 5 years, at the rate of $2,700 per annum."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect as of December 1, 1942, and terminate June 30, 1944, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may prescribe, at which time sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act approved July 1, 1930, shall again become effective.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield in order that I may make an explanation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. MCCARRAN. In the President's veto of the firemen's and policemen's bill which was passed at the last session, he made special mention of the fact that we had not taken care of a great group of employees in the District, namely, the school teachers. The teachers are under different regulation from the firemen and policemen, so that it was necessary, and we deemed it proper, to introduce two bills instead of one. Therefore, Senate bill 17 deals with firemen and policemen, and Senate bill 18 deals with teachers. It is our desire to have the two bills go along together. Therefore, as soon as Senate bill 17 shall have been disposed of, I shall move the immediate consideration of Senate bill 18, so that the two bills may thus proceed through this body together.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in proceeding to the consideration of the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I have presented I wish first of all to express my appreciation of the service which the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] has been rendering to the Senate as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It has been my privilege to serve for 2 years on that committee, and I wish to pay tribute to the diligence, the intelligence, and the activity which he has displayed in leading that rather difficult committee, which deals with many matters which are considered only in committee, and which never reach the floor of the Senate.

My only reason for presenting minority views in this instance is that I feel that the action recommended by the majority is out of line with the policy of the Senate as a whole, and the rates of pay as a whole for the Nation as a whole, and I believe that in order that we may not leave the District behind, in order to treat the District fairly, and not put the District ahead of where it belongs, it is necessary for us to have in mind what is being done with respect to other Federal pay rolls, including other District pay rolls aside from those affecting policemen, firemen, and teachers.

The first obligation we have in the Senate is to make sure that the District of Columbia is not overlooked and left behind when we take measures affecting the rest of the United States. It became clear in the last session that it would be appropriate to increase somewhat the rates of pay of the employees of the Federal and District governments. We therefore passed in the last days of the session Senate Joint Resolution 170, which provided for overtime pay for employees both of the Federal Government and the District, with the exception of the District policemen, firemen, and teachers. That included, in cases where overtime pay could not be readily computed, payment on the basis of a 10-percent bonus. Of course, in the case of policemen, firemen, and teachers, overtime pay cannot be readily computed, and therefore an analogous raise would be a 10-percent bonus to bring them in line with the other employees of the Federal Government and to bring them in line with the other District employees.

It so happened, however, that there had been under study in the District committees of the House and the Senate a proposal to raise the pay of the policemen and firemen in the District of Columbia. I refer to the Metropolitan Police, numbering about 1,661 men; the metropolitan firemen, numbering about 902; the Park Police, numbering 78; and the White House Police, numbering about 126; a total of about 2,767 men, which is by no means a force in excess of what is needed in the District of Columbia.

The rates of pay have not been increased for a long time in the District. Therefore a study was made of that subject, and as a result of the study there was passed in the House a bill which provided on a well-considered basis an increase in the pay of policemen and firemen. The bill came before the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate. It was considered at length. It had the agreement of the members of the Police and Fire Departments, and the District Committee, and it was placed on the calendar with the recommendation that it pass, but it was not acted on in February or March, whenever it reached the calendar, because it was recognized that at that time the Federal Government had not yet acted on pending bills for the increase of pay of employees of other branches of the District and Federal governments. Therefore the bill was held on the calendar until after action was taken in these other fields, and I believe it was appropriately held there. It was finally passed on the same day we passed the bill providing for the other employees and in the light of that bill having passed.

I wish to emphasize first of all that in taking that action we brought the District employees in line with the employees of the Federal Government, and brought the policemen and firemen in line with the other District employees.

The bill contained these provisions: It was to be a permanent increase in pay. It had been discussed on that basis; it had been agreed to on that basis by the representatives of the departments themselves who appeared before the committee. It was a permanent, justified basis of increase in pay, and well deserved. I will yield to no one in the recognition of the necessity for an able, diligent, and loyal police and fire department in a community of some 800,000 people, such as the city of Washington.

The increase provided was on this basis: Beginning with the full patrolman, a man who has had 5 years service, running through the captain, there was provided an increase of $300 per year. That was the uniform basis. Then applying the increase also to the younger men below the 5-year patrolman, it made not so large an increase in their case, but I am convinced the reason for that was that their rate of pay already was above the rate of pay for similar service in many comparable cities in the United States. In any event it was agreed upon by representatives of the department as a permanent basis of pay.

The increase in their case was as follows: Instead of $300 per man, the beginner was raised from $1,900 a year to $2,000 a year. The second year man was raised from $2,000 a year to $2,140 a year, that is an increase of $140 in his case. The third year man was raised from $2,100 a year to $2,280. The fourth year man was raised from $2,200 a year to $2,420. The fifth year man was raised from $2,300 a year to $2,560 a year. And finally the $2,400-a-year man was raised to $2,700, making a $300 increase.

I emphasize that such an increase was probably long over-due. It was necessary. It should have been voted. It was voted by the Senate and by the House in December of last year.

But when the measure reached the President it was vetoed, not because of the increase being too large or too small, but because it was on a permanent basis, whereas the increase to the other Federal employees and District employees was on temporary basis to April 30, 1943; secondly, on the ground that it did not include the teachers, for the teachers had not been put in that bill, and their bill had not come up for action; and, thirdly, on the ground that instead of being retroactive to December 1942, as in the case of the other employees of the Federal Government and the District, it was retroactive to February 1, 1942, because it was an old bill that had been on the calendar for a long time, and had started with that date. It was vetoed on those grounds in a message in which the President suggested that a comparable bill, with those exceptions, would meet with approval.

What I am seeking to do at this time is to move a substitute which will reenact precisely the rate of pay which was agreed upon by the members of the District Committee as a permanent rate of pay, passed in December last on that basis, and now, only 2½ months later, I believe still to be recognized by us as an appropriate rate of pay at this time.

In order that there may be no delay in the men getting their increased pay and getting it from December 1, 1942, it is obvious that we should pass a measure similar to the one which previously passed both Houses of Congress, and was vetoed for certain reasons, and that we should omit the provisions on which the veto was based. If passed in that form, I believe there will be no objection to it in the House, which passed the other bill. It would take effect immediately. It would be generally in line with all other increases of pay in the Federal Government and, in general, would represent an increase of about 10 percent in the cost of the District departments. The cost of these departments to the District is about $6,000,000. The proposed increase in pay would make the cost $6,600,000. Mr. President, it will be remembered that the increase Congress voted Federal employees was 10 percent on the first $2,900. An increase of $290 was provided for many employees drawing more than $2,900. The increase proposed by the amendment being a flat $300 in most cases, and being somewhat less in the lower brackets, is generally in line with that program, and therefore I believe is a fair step to take, particularly in view of the long hearings and the full discussion of the subject with members of the departments.

Therefore, I think it is important, if we are not to leave the District behind, that we pass the bill which will most quickly go through both Houses and bring the employees in question into line with the other employees and let them get their increase as of December 1, 1942.

We made a special examination into these matters to make sure that it is a fair and just measure for the District in line with the proper principles of municipal government at this time. I wish to say first that we have this base to stand on: The measure of increase was approved in the hearings as a permanent basis of pay. Therefore it certainly would be as good now as a basis of pay as it was when a similar bill was passed two and a half months ago.

Next, the increase is substantially the same as was allowed other Federal employees and other employees of the District.

Third, it is generally in line with the pay for comparable work in comparable cities.

Mr. President, I recognize that it is not fair and proper to bind any one city by the example of another. Even the statistics are not comparable in detail. To a certain extent they must be adjusted to meet the cost of living, and I have done that. But I believe that in general I can recognize that the proposed rates, as agreed upon by the departments, and as contained in the bill passed by us last December, are in line with the comparable rates of pay for similar departments elsewhere.

Let us begin with the regular rate of pay for the patrolman—that is the man who will be getting $2,700 under the proposed rate of pay—and let us compare that pay with the pay in the 11 large comparable cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Boston, Baltimore, and Cincinnati. Those are cities which are comparable roughly with Washington in the matter of cost of living. The cost of living in those cities does not vary more than 10 percent from that in Washington. The cost of living in most of them is closer to that of Washington than 10 percent.

If the rate of pay in the District of Columbia for the regular patrolman is fixed at $2,700, there are only five cities in that group where the rate of pay is higher, and there are six where the rate is lower. Washington will be approximately in the average place among cities of similar size. The cities in which the pay is above that in Washington are New York with $3,000; Chicago, $2,802; Detroit, $2,904; Cleveland with a shifting figure of $2,675 to $2,945 in the discretion of the safety department; and San Francisco with $2,700.

Those in which the pay is below that in Washington are Philadelphia with $2,590, Los Angeles with $2,580, Pittsburgh with $2,425, Boston with $2,200, Baltimore with $2,080 for the police department and $2,000 for the fire department, and Cincinnati with $2,124.

Those figures are taken from communications sent to me by the mayors of those cities within the past month.

Turning to the comparable pay of the beginner, as to which a special provision is made in the bill presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], there again we find that the increase from the old pay of $1,900 to the new pay of $2,000 is squarely in line with the average of the comparable cities of the United States. The reason why a larger increase would not be called for is that the pay already is higher than in many comparable cities. In the same comparable cities to which I have referred only five pay more than $2,000 and six pay less than $2,000. The five paying more than $2,000 are Chicago with $2,400, Philadelphia with $2,225, Detroit with $2,310, Los Angeles with $2,280, and San Francisco with $2,400.

Those paying less than $2,000 to beginners are New York, with $1,660; Cleveland, with $1,800; Pittsburgh, with $1,732; Boston, with $1,700; Baltimore, with $1,820 for the policemen and $1,700 for the firemen; and Cincinnati, with $1,320.

Again Washington, on this adjusted basis, is within the average of the comparable cities.

I may say a word also in answer to the argument as to the cost of living. According to the Department of Labor, the cost of living in these 11 cities does not in any case vary more than 10 percent from that in Washington. The lowest figure for cost of living in any of these cities is 90.4 compared with 100 in Washington.

The cities which are paying less to their beginner firemen than the city of Washington under this new plan are New York, with $1,600 as against $2,000. Cost of living is almost exactly the same, because it stands at 99.5 in New York compared to 100 in Washington.

In Cleveland, with $1,800 as the starting figure, the cost of living stands at 95 compared with Washington at 100.

Pittsburgh, with $1,732, 92.8 percent.

Boston, with $1,700, 95.7 percent.

Baltimore, with $1,700 for firemen and $1,820 for policemen, 90.4 percent.

Cincinnati, with $1,320 as a starting point, 91.7 percent.

If each of those amounts were adjusted upward by the necessary 5 or 10 percent increase to meet the cost of living, it would still come under the $2,000 figure provided in the substitute amendment for the beginner.

In dealing with the morale of the city administration and the city police department, I believe that those in the best position to judge what the pay should be and what effect it would have on the morale are those in charge of the executive branch of the Government. I have before me a letter which was sent to the able Senator from Nevada, as chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee, under date of February 6, 1943, signed by the President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The Board of Commissioners disagreed with the Senator from Nevada and in the following words expressly approved the recommendation which I am now making. The last sentence of the letter reads as follows:

> The Commissioners recommend, therefore, that the substitute bill proposed by Senator BURTON be adopted.

That is a definite recommendation by the men responsible for the morale of the employees of both the Police Department and the Fire Department. I am not contending that the rate of pay should not be further studied if later a further increase should be granted to other Federal employees and other employees of the District of Columbia. However, I believe that under the present circumstances the rate of pay proposed by the amendment is justified by the pay for comparable positions and by the action we have already taken with regard to other District employees. If we do not adopt the program which I have proposed, we shall discriminate against other employees of the District of Columbia, who are receiving a 10-percent bonus instead of an increase of $350, as provided in the proposal of the senior Senator from Nevada.

I wish also to emphasize the fact that we are now in the midst of considering general changes in rates of pay for employees of the Federal Government and employees of the District. We are also considering means of economizing in handling the finances of the Federal Government as well as those of the District.

The increase proposed by the majority proposal is not merely an increase of $300 or $350. The cost to the District of Columbia would be increased by one-half. Instead of being increased from $6,000,000 to $6,600,000, the cost would be increased from $6,000,000 to $6,900,000. The increase is such, and the field it covers is such, that it would add 50 percent to the cost of the services.

I do not believe that we should override the recommendations of those in charge of the administration of the District of Columbia, and, over their objection, increase by 50 percent the cost of administration of the District Government for which they are primarily responsible as executive officers of the District.

The factor which really moves me most in bringing this subject to the attention of the Senate is the relation between the pay situation in the District of Columbia and the general pay situation in the Federal Government. It so happens that I have been serving on the Committee on Civil Service. We have been considering a number of bills. We now have before us a bill dealing with rates of pay of Federal employees and employees of the District of Columbia after April 30, 1943. It therefore seems to me that we should await action upon a bill of broad scope before going ahead with one for the District of Columbia on a different basis from anything Congress has adopted in the past.

I wish to emphasize that the bill before us, to which I am objecting, introduces a novel basis for increasing the pay of Federal employees. Instead of being on a 10 percent basis, or on the basis of a $300 flat increase, as proposed in the Postal Service bill—which is not quite comparable—it is on the basis of a $350 flat increase to every employee. That basis is carried over into the teachers' bill, which will follow the bill now before us.

If we are to adopt the basis of a flat increase of $350 for teachers in the District of Columbia and $350 for the Metropolitan Police force, the White House Police, and the Park Police, we shall have difficulty in avoiding the discrimination which will result if we do not do the same thing for other District of Columbia employees, and for that matter, all Federal employees. No greater harm can be done in any kind of governmental practice than to discriminate between employees in comparable positions. Low pay is not so bad as discrimination. Discrimination disorganizes efficient operation of any government. Therefore, I believe we should bring about an increase as promptly as possible, consistent with what we did last December, dealing uniformly with both Federal and District pay rolls. After the general policy has been adopted, if necessary we can reconsider this increase in the light of other adjustments. Let us not place rates of pay for policemen and firemen on a different basis from rates of pay for Federal employees or for other employees of the District of Columbia. I believe it to be in the interest of orderly government to proceed on that basis. Therefore I agree with the District Commissioners that we should pass the substitute measure which I have offered which would keep increases in pay in the District government in line with other increases, rather than put them on an independent basis.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are opposed to the so-called McCarran bill and are in favor of the substitute measure offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I will put into the RECORD the letter of February 6, 1943, which discusses both bills and concludes with the following sentence:

> The Commissioners recommend, therefore, that the substitute bill proposed by Senator BURTON be adopted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator vouch for the letter having been dictated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know by whom the letter was dictated.

Mr. BYRD. By whom was it signed?

Mr. BURTON. The letter was handed to me by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia as a copy of a letter bearing the signature of the President of the Board of Commissioners. My copy does not have the signature on it, but it was handed to me by the corporation counsel as being a copy of the original letter, which I assumed was signed.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from Ohio have any information indicating that the copy was not authentic?

Mr. BURTON. No; and I ask the Senator from Nevada if there is any doubt about the authenticity of the letter.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator has had previous experience along this line, I noticed that he smiled when I propounded the question.

Mr. BYRD. If there is any charge that the copy of the letter to which reference has been made by the able Senator from Ohio is not authentic, it seems to me that the charge should be proved or withdrawn.

Mr. BURTON. I will be glad to withdraw the copy if there is any question about it. I have only the word of the corporation counsel that it is an authentic copy.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not disputing the authenticity of the copy. I have the same letter. I also have the statement which I read a little while before the Senator took the floor, which was made by the same member of the Board of District Commissioners who purportedly signed the letter from which the Senator read to the Senate, a copy of which I have. We have been through this same thing before. We know that certain letters were sent to us which purported to be signed by the President of the Board of Commissioners, but which were not dictated by the President of the Board. I believe the Senator from Ohio will not dispute that statement.

Mr. BURTON. I have no knowledge as to who dictated it. I understand that the letter is authentic. It is signed in the name of, and presumably by, the President of the Board of Commissioners. I assume there is no question about it being an official statement of the President of the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. BYRD. As the Senator knows, many letters are sent, even by the President of the United States, which are not dictated by the President. However, there is no question that the letter referred to by the Senator from Ohio represents the attitude of the District Commissioners, is there?

Mr. BURTON. I believe there is no question about it; and I think the Senator from Nevada recognizes it as the last official statement from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BYRD. I wish to propound another question to the Senator from Ohio. What percentage of increase would be represented by the proposed increase of $350?

Mr. BURTON. Of course, that would vary. As the Senator from Nevada has pointed out, in the case of the man with a lower rate of pay, it would be more than 17 percent. In the case of a $4,500 man it would be less than 10 percent. The net result would be about 15 percent on the median rate of pay. It can be tested most simply by pointing out that under my proposal the cost would be increased by $600,000, while under the majority proposal the cost would be increased by $900,000, or 50 percent, representing an average increase of from 10 to 15 percent.

Mr. BYRD. Do I correctly understand from the Senator from Ohio that the proposed increase of $350 would represent discrepancies and discrimination between employees of the same branch of the service?

Mr. BURTON. The same increase would be granted to each employee, but the percentages would vary. District employees who are not in the police or fire department, and not in the teaching force, would still receive the 10-percent bonus.

Mr. BYRD. There would be further discrimination between District employees and civil service employees of the Federal Government, for whom legislation has already been enacted.

Mr. BURTON. That is correct. Let me add that if there is to be a readjustment of pay on a higher basis than the 10-percent bonus, it will be from April 30, 1943, on, whereas the bill would make the increase effective, even on the highest rate, retroactively from December 1, 1942, for these employees, and these employees alone.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator not agree with me that an increase in pay of District employees in greater proportion than the increase in the pay of civil-service employees would create a discrimination between District employees and Federal employees, which would operate as an influence on Congress to increase the pay of Federal employees to the same extent that the pay of District employees is increased?

Mr. BURTON. Let me say, as the Senator from Nevada has said, that an argument can always be made that the cost of living in the District of Columbia is a little higher than it is elsewhere; but it is so little higher that I do not believe it justifies any such discrepancy as would exist under the committee bill. As compared with the cost of living in most comparable cities, the cost of living in the District of Columbia is less than 10 percent higher. Therefore, that situation would justify at the most an increase of 10 percent in the 10-percent bonus, or an additional 1 percent. There is no justification for a 50-percent increase in cost to the District of Columbia, such as would be brought about by the committee bill.

Mr. BYRD. Let me say that in making such a distinction we should have to make a difference between the pay to civil-service employees in Washington and that to civil-service employees serving elsewhere in the country, which would be an impossible thing to do.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In specific answer to the Senator from Virginia, let me say that the greatest increase under the bill would be 19.4 percent. The increase under House bill 6386, which passed in December, was 26 percent. So if we talk about discrepancies we must take that matter into consideration.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should state at this point, for the Senator from Nevada, that when the increase is more than 10 percent it is because there is an increase in the time worked. The increase is one of overtime pay in recognition of the time worked, rather than a flat bonus for the same time worked.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator state the hours of work of a policeman or fireman?

Mr. BURTON. A policeman or fireman works full time, 24 hours a day. I respect him for it, and he is paid on that basis.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, much ado has been made about the attitude of the District Commissioners. Who knows best the police force of the District of Columbia? Who is best qualified to speak for the District of Columbia so far as its police force is concerned? The District Commissioners have opposed every increase of salary that has been offered. Are they the best qualified? The able Senator from Ohio makes much of a letter he has received, and which he has offered for the RECORD, in which the District Commissioners favor his substitute; but his substitute is almost identical to the bill which Congress passed last December. The District Commissioners opposed it then with all the power they had; they were opposed to the Senator's bill in December last; but they are in favor of it now, notwithstanding the fact that the cost of living in the District of Columbia has gone up since December last as reported by the Labor Department. They were opposed to a $300 increase in December; they were opposed to a $300 increase throughout the year 1942; but they are in favor of it now in place of a $350 increase which is only slightly in keeping, if you please, with the increased cost of living in the District of Columbia. But who knows the Police Department of the District of Columbia best—the Commissioners or the Chief of Police? Let us see what the Chief of Police says about this. He is not in the category that would be affected; he would not be touched by this bill at all; he is entirely removed from it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to say that the proposed substitute is practically the same as House bill 6386 which was vetoed by the President?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Ohio in his proposal does not provide retroactive payment to February 1, 1942, as did the bill passed at the last session; he does not provide that the increase shall be permanent as did the bill which was vetoed.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. So the proposed substitute of the Senator from Ohio is not the same as the legislation the Commissioners opposed when a similar bill was under consideration at the last session.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Commissioners opposed it in the early part of 1942, when the retroactive feature would have been operative only for 30 or 60 days. The retroactive feature, of course, became augmented when the bill passed the Senate because such a long delay had been permitted to ensue; but the District Commissioners were opposed to it when it was first initiated, and they will be opposed to every proposal for an increase in the compensation of men who toil which may be presented, but they will not oppose a raise in their own set-up, and mark my words as to that. They will oppose those in the police department who pound the sidewalks and those in the fire department who respond to alarms, but they will not oppose anything that augments their own power. Power is a funny thing, and it is just as funny in the District of Columbia as it is elsewhere. Let us see what the Chief of Police of the District says. I read from the record.

Major KELLY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see the men of the police department get an increase commensurate with the scale of living—

"An increase commensurate with the scale of living." What is that? It is 114.9 as compared with other cities. That is the scale of living in the District of Columbia.

We know that the cost of living has gone up, and I would like to see the men in our department who are performing hazardous duties at all times get a sufficient raise so that their families would be able to enjoy, as comparably as they possibly can, an increase of salary to meet conditions due to the national emergency.

I would say that since the national emergency started policemen have been called upon to render many extra duties. In the beginning we were required to cancel leaves, days off, due to the many details we were required to perform. As time went on, we restored the day off, and we restored the leave as best we could, granting 3 days' leave to about 4 or 5 percent of each precinct. We have increased that a little now. We have gone up now to 5 or 6 days, probably a little more, in each precinct and each unit to 10 percent of the command. The Manual requires us to grant leave to no more than 10 percent of the command at any one time.

The men have put in many extra hours of work. In many cases we have tried to restore the hours that they have lost, but there has been such an accumulation of extra work that up to this time we have not been able to give it all back to the men.

I would like to say on behalf of the members of the police department that have performed fine police work during the past year.

Who has performed that work? I draw the attention of the Senator from Virginia because he has given so much attention to this matter that I think it is well for him to dwell upon it. Who has performed so much extra work? The police force of the District of Columbia in which the Senator from Virginia is so much interested.

Let me say here, to digress for a moment, that there is a very highly critical tone in the views of the minority. I do not think there is anyone more interested in the District of Columbia than is the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what was it the Senator said about a "highly critical tone"?

Mr. McCARRAN. I said there is a highly critical tone in the views of the minority on the bill. That does not apply to the Senator from Virginia of course, and if he will wait a moment——

Mr. BYRD. I thought the Senator from Nevada referred to "the Senator from Virginia."

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator from Virginia will give me his attention, he will not then be mistaken.

Mr. BYRD. I was trying to give the Senator my attention, but I was diverted for a moment and probably missed that part of his remarks.

Mr. McCARRAN. I always try to give the Senator from Virginia my attention. Perhaps there are other more interesting matters at this time, but the statement in the views of the minority to which I refer is that which criticizes the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia because the committee reported to the Senate a bill when, the minority views say, there was not a quorum of the committee present at the time. Mr. President, if the Committee on the District of Columbia should wait for a quorum, it would wait a long time.

Mr. President, I have had in my possession for many months—indeed, ever since I have been chairman of the committee—the proxy of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I think it is a great honor for me to hold it, and never once has he questioned it. The senior Senator from Virginia has always been willing to go along with my judgment on these matters, and I am surprised that the junior Senator from Virginia does not go along with the senior Senator from Virginia in this all-important matter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Virginia usually makes up his own mind and votes his own convictions; and while he has great regard for the senior Senator from Virginia, the senior Senator from Virginia has not been here. So, why should I follow the senior Senator from Virginia when he has been unable to attend the hearings of the District of Columbia Committee?

I wish to say further that I have great admiration and respect for the distinguished chairman of the committee, and I am entirely willing to vote to give to the policemen of the District of Columbia, as I said before, a reasonable increase in salary, and I think that the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio gives a reasonable and proper increase to the policemen of the District of Columbia, and I speak as one who is very deeply interested in the District of Columbia. I want to see justice done to the policemen of the District, and I think the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio will do justice to them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator think that his constituents would be overpaid if they received $4.16 more a month than they would get under the substitute?

Mr. BYRD. I think that the proposal made by the Senator from Ohio to give a $300 increase on the average, as I understand it, would provide an adequate increase and would be in proportion to what has been done in the case of employees of the Federal Government. For that reason I intend to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then $4.16 to men who receive less than a living wage in the District of Columbia, some of whom——

Mr. BYRD. I do not admit that they receive less than a living wage.

Mr. McCARRAN. Just a moment. I have the floor, and I refuse to yield to that kind of argument.

Mr. BYRD. I do not admit the Senator's premise——

Mr. McCARRAN. The figures constitute the premise.

Mr. BYRD. I do not admit that the premise of the Senator from Nevada that they are not receiving a living wage and that the proposal of the Senator from Ohio would give them less than a living wage is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. The substitute of the Senator from Ohio would give those in the lower brackets $4.16 a month less than the bill reported by the committee. If the Senator wants to take from his constituents $4.16 a month—another bottle of milk, perhaps, or another pair of shoes for the policemen—then, I have no further argument to make to the able Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Virginia would take nothing from the salaries of the police; it is a question of increasing their salaries, as the Senator from Nevada well knows, and when he say I want to take from any of my constituents who may be on the police force $4.16 a month, which has not been given to them, he is making a statement that is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is borne out by the figures, and figures do not lie.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator contend that the policemen have this increase now.

Mr. McCARRAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator contend that the policemen have the increase now?

Mr. McCARRAN. No.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Nevada said the Senator from Virginia was taking it away from them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly the Senator will attempt to, if he votes for the substitute.

Mr. BYRD. Take away something they do not have?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; take away from them something they should have.

Mr. BYRD. There is a disagreement with the Senator about that, and I think the Senator should be reasonable enough to know that we can differ about these matters. The Senator has a fine mind, and I respect it. He is an able, brilliant Senator, but I have at least some mental capacity, and I try to operate my mind as best I can.

Mr. McCARRAN. That does not answer the argument at all. That is just a plaudit, which does not answer anything.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is assuming that his judgment is infallible and always correct——

Mr. McCARRAN. Not at all.

Mr. BYRD. I say that there are others in the Senate who have some judgment, and all we can do in these matters is to vote in accordance with the dictates of our conscience.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I am willing to vote as I have suggested, and I am doing it with the knowledge, which the Senator must have, that I am deeply interested in the maintenance of law and order in the District of Columbia. I am voting as indicated because I think the provision proposed is fair and just. The Senator may disagree with me, but when he talks about my taking away $4.16 from the policemen, which he says is a bottle of milk a day, then he is stating something that is not correct, because they have not gotten the $4.16.

Mr. McCARRAN. With the same degree of cogency the Senator could say they have not the $300, either.

Mr. BYRD. Why should I not vote, by the same reasoning, to make the figure $400 or $500?

Mr. McCARRAN. Vote to give them a bottle of milk.

Mr. BYRD. Not only a bottle of milk but a bottle of something else, too, perhaps. With all due respect to the Senator from Nevada, who usually makes a clear and logical argument, I do not think in this instance he is doing so.

Mr. McCARRAN. The trouble is that the Senator from Virginia, in making his argument here, in propounding a question to the Senator from Ohio, seems to be wedded to the substitute bill because there is a differential of $50.

Mr. BYRD. I did not say I was wedded to it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I say there is a differential of $4.16 a month.

Mr. BYRD. I do not think the Senator from Nevada should put words in my mouth. I never said I was wedded to it for that reason. I merely asked a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator said so himself.

Mr. BYRD. I did not say I was wedded to it. I said I approved the proposal of the Senator from Ohio, and I approved that particular provision. That is not the only reason why I shall vote for the proposal of the Senator from Ohio. I think all of us are entitled to our judgment, that we are all entitled to vote as we see fit to vote. I may make many errors—as I do—but at least I can say I vote in accordance with my sincere judgment.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry to see the Senator from Virginia, whom I have followed very closely in his effort to effect economies, and whom I hope to continue to support very closely, go into a line which does not reflect economy at all. In other words, I dislike to see him led astray by something based on a false premise.

Mr. BYRD. I appreciate very much the kindness of the Senator in acting as my guardian. I shall be very careful to observe and give full consideration to all the suggestions he may make.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator. I continue now with the statement of Major Kelly:

I would like to say on behalf of the members of the police department that they have performed fine police work during the past year. They have been very faithful, very loyal, and their devotion to duty is commendable.

The CHAIRMAN. What has been your turnover, Major?

Major KELLY. We have appointed approximately, in the past year, about 560 men.

Mr. President, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to that. He says:

We have appointed approximately, in the past year, about 560 men.

Why was there such a turn-over when, under the classified civil service, these men were assured of a tenure in office? Why was there a turn-over? It was simply because $1,900 would not sustain the average family in the District of Columbia, and therefore it was not alluring to men to enter the service and serve for a year, or perhaps longer, at $1,900 a year. Secondly, it was because a position paying $1,900 a year, while it might have been worth while a year ago, is not worth while now. There are 77 vacancies in the police department of the District of Columbia at this time because it is not possible to fill the places. Yet the Chief of Police is asking for more men because of the District's increase in population, extending into the hundreds of thousands.

I read further from the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. You have lost that number and more?

Major KELLY. We have not lost exactly that many, but Congress last year was generous enough to give to the police department 195 additional men, which made that many vacancies. Then we have been required also to fill vacancies that occurred at the White House. The bill passed also allowed them 60 additional men. Then, with the many enlistments, with some men inducted into the service, many men belonging to the Officers' Reserve, and men enlisting voluntarily, and separations for various reasons caused the remainder of the vacancies.

The CHAIRMAN. In your judgment, and from your observation, Major, did the high salaries paid in other lines of work draw from your force to any great extent?

Major KELLY. We have had some few men who have resigned from the service due to the fact that they have obtained better positions. We feel also that many other men would leave the service if it were not for the security of the positions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Budget for the coming year does not promise you any considerable amount for increases. In other words, you asked for 200 and the Budget contemplates about 100?

Major KELLY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that struck me—and I hope you will correct me if I am wrong—when I saw that item, it struck me that with the increased population of the District of Columbia, and the increased duties that have devolved upon and will devolve upon the police force, when in your judgment the 200 was absolutely essential that the 100 will not meet the essential phases, hence you are going to impress on the police force for the next year at least just as we have in the past, a greater number of overtime hours, a greater vigilance and a greater service in every respect. Am I correct in that assumption?

Major KELLY. In asking for 200 men, to be honest and candid about it, that is not a drop in the bucket. With the increased population, with the many new streets throughout the District of Columbia, the many new houses that have gone up, apartments all throughout the city—and some of the settlements are practically cities in themselves. I was talking one time with Mayor LaGuardia, in comparing our police department with theirs. They have between 18,000 and 19,000 policemen for a population of 7,000,000 people. I am convinced that our population, the people living in the District of Columbia, together with people who come into the District of Columbia from nearby Maryland and Virginia for their employment, runs us over a million people. Mayor LaGuardia said at that time, considering our growing population and a comparison with his police department, that it looked like we should have about 3,000 policemen.

I dwell on that for a moment, because it is imposing on some 1,600 policemen now in the District of Columbia duties which should be performed by 3,000 policemen. That grows out of the fact that the Capital of the Nation is a place of attraction. Thousands of people are coming into the District daily. Not only that but hundreds of thousands who were not employed here before are now being employed here. People who have come from every section of the country, people who have come from every section of the world, are being employed here, and there is not a city in all the extent of this country that is better governed, from the standpoint of the police regulations and the police records, than is the District of Columbia at the present time. I say governed from the police standpoint, mind you. I limit my expression to that.

Mr. President, some misleading statements have been made here by my able colleague the Senator from Ohio, and I wish to dwell on them, and I think what I have before me, prepared on the basis of the figures, is sufficient to sustain what I am contending.

In several of its passages the minority views seem likely to mislead a casual reader. They have evidently misled one Member of the Senate. For instance, the first paragraph on page 4 of the minority views gives the impression, intentionally or otherwise, that the committee bill will boost the increase or proposed raise $290,000 above the raise proposed by the minority proposal, through granting increases to high-salaried employees. That is not the fact.

In the case of policemen, the five grades of privates now receiving under $2,400 per year would get $260,050 of the total raises proposed by the committee bill. The minority substitute would give these same men raises totaling only $104,540. Thus $155,510 of the total by which the cost of the committee bill exceeds that of the minority substitute would go to these privates in the Metropolitan Police force, the men who most deserve and need increases.

Let me dwell on that point for a moment. One thousand nine hundred dollars is the pay for police service during the first year of service. There is great attraction to those in that service to go abroad and work for higher salaries, for the cost of living in the District of Columbia is going up by leaps and bounds. It was testified by the writer of the letter which was read earlier today at the desk that $1,900 is no salary at all. What would the substitute bill give to the newly appointed policeman? It would give him an increase of $100 a year. He might just as well receive no increase. He may go out and get a job paying him $14 a day, or $100 a week, or $500 a month, a job which he knows he can get on the outside in war activity. However, due to his loyalty, due to his desire to serve, due to an adherence to service, due to the fact that if he remains constant in his present position he will have something in the future, the man remains on the job at a salary of $1,900 a year, and he would remain on the job at $1,900 a year, plus $100 increase if the substitute bill were enacted. It seems to me those things should be considered by us.

What will we do with 360 men who now receive only $1,900 a year, and who would receive an increase in salary of only $100 under the substitute measure? What will we do with 337 men who under the substitute will receive only an approximate 14 percent raise in salary, whereas the rise in the cost of living is 19.5 percent? It seems to me it is a question of being practical rather than of being theoretical.

Mr. President, there are those who are opposed to any increase in salaries at this time. Perhaps that is proper. There are those who are so economically minded that they can see nothing but cutting down salaries and wages. But the economy of the country does not run that way. The economy of the country is increasing the cost of living to the average citizen. If we cut down the salaries of those in the public service we will force public servants out of office. They will not serve us any longer. They will go where they can receive better pay, and they can always come back to their old jobs in time of stress. It seems to me it would be much better to take a practical view of this whole situation than to take of it a theoretical, economic view.

Mr. President, under the committee bill or the proposed substitute, who will get the extra money represented by the increased pay?

In the case of policemen, the five grades of privates now receiving under $2,400 per year would get $260,000 of the total raises proposed by the committee bill. The minority substitute would give these same men raises totaling only $104,540. Thus $155,510 of the total by which the cost of the committee bill exceeds that of the minority substitute would go to these privates in the Metropolitan Police force, the men who most deserve and need increases. Raises proposed by the committee bill for police officials now receiving over $3,600 per year would total only $2,100.

In the case of firemen, 295 men now receiving less than $2,400 per year would get $103,250 of the total raises proposed by the committee bill. The minority substitute would give these same men raises totaling $39,340. Thus $63,910 of the difference in cost between the committee bill and the proposed minority substitute would go to these men who need the raises most. Raises proposed by the committee bill for officials of the fire department now receiving more than $3,000 would total only $5,250.

Mr. President, something was said by the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] bearing on the subject of the increased cost of living. Let me say that the increased cost of living in some of the cities mentioned by him must be considered from the standpoint of an increase that was in existence when the tabulations used by the Senator were formulated, and long before. Let us take, for instance, Philadelphia. The subsistence level in Philadelphia for a family of four is $1,570. In Detroit it is $1,686. In Los Angeles it is $1,574. In Cleveland it is $1,645. In Baltimore it is $1,566. In St. Louis it is $1,670. In Boston it is $1,657. In Pittsburgh it is $1,606. Whereas in Washington it is $1,731—the highest of all.

Following the cities I have mentioned come San Francisco, and others, including Kansas City.

Mr. President, laying aside all technicalities, does anyone deny, and will the able Senator from Ohio deny that the cost of living has increased in the District of Columbia far out of line compared with the cost of living in any other city in the country? Will anyone deny that the cost of living in the District of Columbia is higher than in any other comparable city of the country? If it be true that the cost of living in the District of Columbia is higher than in any other comparable city of the country, let us not forget the public servants who serve not in hours, but in days and years, who have no limit of time of service, but are subject to call at all times, and let us say to them, "You shall have at least an increase of compensation commensurate with the cost of living as it has gone up in the District of Columbia." If we do that we will not give an increase of $100 to the $1,900-a-year men, and approximately $150 a year increase to the $2,400-a-year men. We will give the higher range of increase to the one who needs it, to the one who has, for example, two children and a wife, and who has been obliged to move out of the District of Columbia in order to live at all, and who denies himself everything, and who can provide his children only a minimum of amusement. We will give a raise to such an employee commensurate with the raises given in the higher brackets. We will give such an employee a raise of $350 a year.

Mr. President, let me now speak of the danger of a veto in this case. Let us study the veto message of the President with respect to the bill passed last year. The President dwelt specifically upon the fact that we had not taken in the teachers of the District of Columbia, and then he dwelt upon the fact that we allowed the bill to rest so long in the Senate that it was retroactive to the extent of 1 year. When we put the bill through the Senate in December we were standing between the devil and the deep blue sea. In other words, if we sent it back to the House, at that time there was not a quorum of the membership of the House in the city, so that one objection would kill the bill. If we passed it and sent it to the President, he might veto it. We took a chance with the latter course, and got "left." We would have been "left" in either event. Now we have before us a bill which has been worked out based on the facts in the case, and we ask that the substitute bill be not adopted.

STRIKES IN WAR INDUSTRIES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I introduce a bill entitled "Relating to strikes in war industries during the war, and for other purposes" and ask unanimous consent that the bill be read at the desk for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 802) relating to strikes in war industries during the war, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to marshal and utilize the full manpower of the country in the present emergency, in all war industries as well as in the combat services; and

Whereas the critical need of the armed services for supplies, munitions, and shipping makes it imperative that no stoppages of work in war industries be tolerated for any cause, or for any length of time. Strikes, slow-downs, and voluntary absences from work are definite aids to the enemy; and

Whereas recalcitrant employers have been effectively dealt with by seizure of their plants under authority of war powers legislation; and

Whereas the adjustment of wages has been taken out of the control of management by order of the Administrator of Economic Stabilization; and

Whereas management, having been deprived by governmental edict of jurisdiction to bargain collectively under the National Labor Relations Act with reference to adjustment of wages, is powerless to adjust those differences that cause industrial strife.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m) Until the cessation of hostilities in the present war every registrant under this act (1) who is employed by any person engaged under contract or otherwise in the manufacture, production, or mining of any articles or materials for the United States or any agency thereof, or of any articles or materials required by the United States or any agency thereof for use in connection with the war effort, and (2) who strikes or acts in concert with other employees in such manner that their absence from work will seriously impede or delay the manufacture, production, or mining of such articles or materials, shall immediately notify his selective service local board to that effect, and the employers affected shall make public the names and addresses of the employees concerned. Thereupon, such local board shall proceed immediately to determine, subject to appeal in accordance with section 10 (a) (2) whether it will be in the best interests of the war effort for such registrant to be inducted into the land or naval forces under this act, to continue to be employed in the work in which he was engaged immediately prior to his notification to the local board as herein provided, or to be employed in some other work essential to the war effort. The local board shall notify the registrant of its determination and shall attach to such notification an appropriate order directing the registrant to report for induction into the land or naval forces or to return to work. Each such registrant who fails to notify his local board as herein provided, or who fails to comply with any such order issued by his local board, shall be subject to the same penalties that are applicable in the case of failure to comply with any other requirement of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will be received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the bill just introduced is for the purpose of preventing strikes, or "employees acting in concert with each other in such manner as their absence from work will seriously impede or delay the production of materials of war."

It may be called work-or-fight legislation.

I fully realize that the problem is a most difficult one. I have no desire whatever to be unfair to labor or deprive it of any rights. However, after all, Mr. President, in time of war all considerations must yield to the paramount question of national defense.

It is true—and I have said it time and time again—that only a small minority of the laboring people of America are not cooperating in proper measure with the war effort; but a minority can seriously interfere with the production of the essential equipment which will gain for America a victory based on an unconditional surrender at the earliest possible time.

In this day of our peril we can no longer tolerate any interference from any source whatsoever with a 100-percent utilization of all the manpower and resources of America.

Existing law provides that if an employer does not cooperate with the Government, the President has the power to seize his plant; but there is no law which prohibits strikes or controls the new and insidious methods of certain labor leaders who induce the members of their unions to absent themselves en masse, such as the vote taken yesterday by the workers at the Lockheed and Vega aircraft plants at Los Angeles to hold a 24-hour mass meeting beginning at 12:30 a. m. Wednesday in protest against the War Labor Board's delay in handing down a decision on wage demands, or to control such instances as that which occurred in the Boeing plant at Seattle last week, when 10,000 workmen, as reported by the Associated Press, left their tools and machines to demonstrate by means of a parade their intention to strike if their demand for higher wages was not approved by the War Labor Board.

It is true that this strike threat was camouflaged under what the leaders called the holding of a 24-hour general labor meeting, and will proceed to unfinished business and from then on will wait for the War Labor Board to give its decision, but the effect is the same. There was a cessation of work in these plants producing Flying Fortresses, the most needed and effective of all our implements of war.

The bill proposed may not be perfect but it certainly offers a basis for a method of control which will prevent those impediments and delays which are now occurring in the production of munitions of war using the existing machinery established by the Selective Service and Training Act.

It amends the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940, under which every male citizen from 18 to 65 years of age—from 18 to 45 for military service—has already registered. This registration was required so that those within these age limits could be utilized in the most effective manner in the prosecution of the war.

The bill provides that any man between the ages of 18 and 65 who strikes or acts in concert with other employees in such manner that their absence from work will seriously impede or delay the production of war materials, shall immediately notify his local selective-service board to that effect, and if he fails to do so he shall be subject to the penalties imposed under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

It further provides that the employers affected shall make public the names and addresses of the employees who strike, or who act in concert with other employees in such manner that their absence from work will seriously impede or delay the production of war equipment.

The bill then would provide that the local board, subject to the same appeals which now exist in the Selective Training and Service Act, may decide which is for the best interest of the country, whether such registrant shall be inducted into the armed forces, or whether he shall continue in the work in which he was engaged at the time of his act, or whether he shall be employed in some other work essential to the war effort.

The regulations of the Selective Training and Service Act already provide that any registrant who changes his place of living or his occupation shall notify his local board. Therefore the notification required in this law is entirely consistent with the underlying principle of the selective-service registration.

It is, of course, true that at the present time the armed forces are inducting into service only those between the ages of 18 and 38, so under present regulations, those over 38 who commit the acts set forth in this proposed bill would not be inducted into the armed forces, but the local boards, with the new authority provided under the proposed legislation, could compel such registrants to work either in the plant where the impediment to production occurred, or in some other essential war activity, so that the services of such registrants could be utilized to the best advantage in the war effort.

The proposed legislation would be operative only until the cessation of hostilities.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe that one thing which the recent strike in the Boeing plant has made evident is that the War Labor Board has been rather slow in passing on disputes. Of course, if the Labor Board does not in the future act with more speed than it acted in the case to which reference has been made, it will tend to increase industrial unrest considerably. It would be unfortunate, therefore, if we were to have strikes in the future because the War Labor Board has not been quick in acting upon the disputes which have come before it.

I do not make that observation in a spirit of antagonism to anything the distinguished Senator from Virginia has said. However, some agencies which are beyond the scope of Congress should be put on notice to do what they can to prevent strikes and not give opportunity for workmen to complain that long delays cause them to suffer injustices, which may or may not be the case. I read a very interesting article on the subject by Mr. Arthur Krock. The article was published in last Sunday's New York Times. The situation seems to be that the motivation of the strike referred to was not so much due to the issue involved as to the failure of the agency set up by the Government actually to pass upon the matter and adjudicate it in accordance with the facts. So far as we can we should serve notice on the War Labor Board that we expect it to see that strikes are not caused by delays—which have occurred in too many cases—in adjudicating matters coming before it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. How long did the War Labor Board have the matter under consideration—for 2 weeks or for 2 months?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know the time; but my recollection is that it was several months. They were about to decide it once, and then a petition for reexamination was filed by one member of the Board. Then the Board looked into the matter a second time. If my recollection is correct, I think the strike occurred approximately 6 weeks or 2 months after the Board looked into the matter the second time. In the meantime, no decision had been handed down.

The matter of wages is at the Board's disposal. They know how much the workers are receiving; they have the formula and the procedure. It seems to me they could very quickly ascertain whether there was merit in the complaint, and could arrive at a decision. I can think of nothing more unfortunate in the trial of a lawsuit than long delay during which a man does not know where he stands. Perhaps the workmen in this case were basically all wrong, or perhaps they were all right. I am not purporting to pass on that. But at least there should be quick action by the War Labor Board so as not to create unnecessary dissension in the ranks of the workers.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Maryland that there should be no undue delay in the settlement of the question of increased wages for workers. However, I point out that the present situation is only one instance of strikes occurring throughout the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am simply saying that the occasion is one which will supplement the occurrence of strikes throughout the country. In the Boeing case, I think the War Labor Board contributed no small factor to the loss of 6 hours' work by each of 10,000 workmen; whereas if the decision had been promptly rendered the strike might have been prevented. The Government should be as careful as anyone else in making sure that it is not responsible for the loss of man-hours of work during the war.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, under Government regulations now existing, no employer can increase wages and salaries without the approval of the War Labor Board. A strike today in a war-industry plant for higher wages is not a strike against the employer, but is a strike against the War Labor Board, representing the Government. It is, in fact, a strike directly against the Government itself.

I agree that an agency of the Government, such as the War Labor Board, should have authority over increases in wages. Such authority is now effective, and it is, therefore, more imperatively necessary than previously that the Congress itself, by a strong declaration of policy, decree that strikes affecting war production shall not be permitted during the war emergency. I say this because what little influence the employer once had to prevent a strike has been taken away, first, due to the fact that the employer has been deprived of the right of discharging striking employees for striking, and second, because the employer is no longer able to adjust the wages of his own employees.

The granting of wage increases involves the vital question of the control of inflation. It seems to me obvious, therefore, that if wages are to be controlled to avoid inflation, strikes must be controlled as well. There is ample governmental machinery already established to correct any injustices or inequalities in wages that now exist.

It appears to be evident that we are faced again with strikes and threats of strikes. The instance of 10,000 workers leaving their tools and machines in the manufacture of Flying Fortresses at the Boeing plant in Seattle and parading through the streets as a demonstration to secure an increase in wages under threat of strike, and the statements made by their labor leaders, give an ominous warning that unless their demand is granted, a general strike in all airplane plants on the west coast will be called.

In the East the demands of John L. Lewis for large wage increases in the coal field will come up for consideration on March 10. Recalling the victory John L. Lewis won over the Government when he was appointed an arbiter by the President to sit on his own case, the country can anticipate a determined and bitter fight by this labor leader to win the increases in wages, and other concessions he is now asking. Interruption of the Nation's coal supply, even for a short period, will strike at the very lifeblood of the war effort.

Heretofore the administration has opposed antistrike legislation, and it has been mainly due to the influence of the administration that no such protective legislation has yet been adopted by both branches of Congress.

On June 13, 1941, the Senate adopted a resolution stating that it was "the sense of Congress that strikes in industries that affect the national defense effort are contrary to sound public policy and they are hereby condemned," but due to the influence of the administration this resolution was defeated in the House.

The House, by large majorities, passed two Smith bills, which, if enacted, would have done much to curb strikes and speed the war effort, but both those bills were smothered in the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. Therefore, up to this date, there has not been a law enacted by Congress to control strikes in war industries, which have done so much to sabotage a 100-percent war effort.

While lately effort has been made to minimize strikes, the fact is that strikes in vital war industries have been constantly occurring. In the year before Pearl Harbor, when this country was preparing for its own defense, the Labor Department reports that 23,047,000 man-days were lost in all strikes. In the year after Pearl Harbor, with the country at war, as reported by the War Labor Board, 4,565,000 man-days were lost in all industries. Of these, 2,095,294 man-days were classified as being in war industries; but the fact is that practically every strike since Pearl Harbor, and most of the strikes since the emergency began, have affected adversely the war effort, even though occurring in a plant not classified as a war-production plant. For example, today, with the impending shortage of food, a food industry is not classified as a war industry, yet a strike in any food processing plant is just as much a strike against the war effort as a strike in a war-production plant.

In the 4 weeks ending January 23, 1943, in war industries alone 258,498 man-days were lost, as reported by the War Labor Board. If this ratio continued throughout the year 1943, there would be an increase of approximately 50 percent of the man-days lost in war industries as compared to 1942.

It is true that the man-days lost since Pearl Harbor involve only a small percentage of those who work in war-production plants, which proves what I have said many times before, that a vast majority of the workingmen of this country are completely loyal and are doing their utmost to promote the war effort, but this does not excuse even a minority, headed by unprincipled leaders, who are willing to sabotage the war effort if such action succeeds in advancing their own selfish interests.

In this desperate war in which we are engaged we must mobilize every resource of America, both at home and on the battlefield, to win the earliest possible victory.

Not only do we have strikes today, but it has been definitely shown that absenteeism is doing even more to retard the full war effort, and I believe this bill will do much to prevent unwarranted absenteeism.

The No. 1 job before the country is to win this war, and every day that we can shorten the war means saving perhaps thousands of American lives.

I feel the time has come when the question of strikes or unwarranted absenteeism in plants must be dealt with firmly and effectively. We must hit at the heart of the matter, and Congress should declare, by effective legislation, that we will not tolerate unwarranted absenteeism or any other stoppage of work which denies to our soldiers the equipment and material necessary to achieve the task we have given them—to defeat by unconditional surrender the most brutal yet the most efficient enemies this country has ever faced.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement from the War Production Board showing the man-days of strike idleness in all industries, as well as in war industries, again emphasizing that since Pearl Harbor a strike in any industry in practically every instance has had an adverse effect on the full war effort.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE II—Man-days of strike idleness

| | 5-year average, 1937-41, all industries | 1942, all industries | 1942, war industries |
|---|---|---|---|
| January | 923,378 | 390,000 | 46,197 |
| February | 796,608 | 425,000 | 118,700 |

| Monthly average | 1,418,896 | 380,417 | 174,608 |

Mr. BYRD. I further ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a very able article by Arthur Krock, appearing in the New York Times of February 28.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TIE-UP AT BOEING POSES NEW CRISIS IN WAR LABOR—MEMBERS OF CONGRESS GROW RESTIVE, SOLDIER BACK FROM AFRICA TALKS OF PLANES THAT DID NOT COME—WAGE RULING DELAYED BY WAR LABOR BOARD

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, February 27.—Thousands of workers in the Boeing plants on the Pacific coast laid down the tools and left the machines by which the great Flying Fortresses are made in protest this week against the length of time it has taken the War Labor Board to pass on higher wage demands.

Before wiser counsels prevailed, some of the workers' spokesmen said that, until the Board acts and acts satisfactorily, the walkouts will continue and will be made general in the aircraft industry. This would, of course, have steadily reduced the production of airplanes on which the safety and victory of the American armed forces depend.

Congress was quick to respond to this latest breach by union members of the pledge of their leaders to abandon the strike as an economic weapon for the duration of the war. Senator CONNALLY reintroduced a bill which the administration had influenced him to withdraw some time ago in consideration of the establishment of War Labor Board and the no-strike pledge. This bill would outlaw strikes and provide for Army seizure and operation of struck war plants, with heavy penalties for the strikers. In the House related moves were made to maintain vital war production.

SOLDIER'S CONDEMNATION

Out at Walter Reed Hospital in Washington 14 United States soldiers, who were wounded in the north African fighting, lay in a ward and read the news from the Pacific coast. One of their number, Corp. H. V. La Rochelle, who said he was the spokesman of them all, was quoted in the local press as follows:

"We who have lain in shell holes watching the skies for bomber and fighter plane help which failed to appear feel pretty bitter about the whole thing. In the Army, acts less treasonable than this are punishable with death before a firing squad."

These things were said and done in the United States this week.

It is fair to relate that the aircraft workers on the west coast have a grievance. Since last July they have been asking the War Labor Board to pass on an application for higher pay. A conference on the subject broke down in Los Angeles during that month, presided over by Paul Porter. Contracts had generally expired between April and July for 9 plants with 250,000 employees. There followed a period of uncertainty as to the wage policy of the administration until October 2, when the Stabilization Act was passed and the War Labor Board was directed to stand by the Little Steel formula.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE BOARD

The Board then instructed Mr. Porter to pursue a further inquiry. He finished it in December and made recommendations for increases which have been before the War Labor Board ever since. But the case is hot, and the Board has been busy with the administrative work of setting up regional groups to carry out its wage policies.

The result was the delay against which the Boeing workers demonstrated. Probably they heard whispers that good unions do not get the attention from the War Labor Board that hell-raising unions do.

But also the Boeing worker leadership has been troublesome to the industry and to the country. Before Hitler attacked Russia, when, according to the Communist Party line in the United States, the anti-Axis nations which we were aiding were engaged merely in a capitalist war, there was much Communist leadership at Boeing. When Russia was bombarded into an allied position, and especially after the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, this leadership was supplanted by an experienced, mature spokesman named Garry Cotton, who had the support of the International Association of Machinists, the parent American Federation of Labor organization. But he was not extreme enough to suit the hotheads in the local, and they replaced Cotton with H. J. Gibson, younger and lacking experience.

UNION'S DEMANDS

The international union, if this grave matter is not quickly settled and for keeps, can suspend the local. But then in all likelihood it will go over to the Congress of Industrial Organizations and there will be a loss of dues and no improvement in the situation. For the workers are plainly out to bully the War Labor Board in giving them more than Mr. Porter recommended. They are asking for a beginning wage of 95 cents an hour instead of the present 62.5 cents, at Boeing, and the present 60 cents in southern California. Mr. Porter has proposed: A beginning wage of 65 cents at Boeing, rising to 85 cents at the end of 16 weeks; the maintenance of the beginning wage of 60 cents in southern California, rising to 80 cents at the end of 16 weeks.

These are the general facts in the controversy which produced the things said and done in the United States this week that have been enumerated above. The President was suffering from a slight illness during the course of events, and the White House explained that, had he not been ordered by his doctors to refrain from action in any but the greatest emergencies, he would have intervened by telephone.

The President's health is more than ever of vital importance to the United Nations and the cause for which they are at war. But when it is completely safe for him to assert himself, and if at that time there remains even the vestige of a threat that workers will close down any of the aircraft plants, however briefly, it is plain that Congress and the country will expect him to act sternly. And, from what the wounded corporal said, it seems certain that the armed forces of the United States would applaud the most vigorous action necessary.

DRAMA OF IMAGINATION

What will that action be, assuming that the threat of further work stoppages continues and the President has directed the War Labor Board to stand by his wage stabilization, anti-inflation policy against all strong-arm pressures? No prediction may be ventured. But imagination may be indulged, and the following dramatic act envisaged which this generation will probably never witness, chiefly because, one hopes, it will never be necessary.

All broadcast facilities are ordered to be mobilized to carry throughout the United Nations words issuing from a microphone in the White House. American Army commanders in India, China, the islands of the Pacific, South America, the Caribbean, Iceland, Alaska, Africa, and the United States are instructed to assemble as an audience all troops not engaged in battle or activities germane to battle. The Navy has directed its men to stand by to listen, wherever possible.

THE PRESIDENT SPEAKS

On the ground, on and under the sea, and in the air the armed forces of the United States—men and women—hear these words from the Commander in Chief:

"Henceforth there will be no work stoppages in the production of the supplies you must have to fight the war. I have directed the Army and the Navy to take over at once any war plant where there is even the semblance of a strike, a slow-down, or abnormal absenteeism.

"I have directed Selective Service to draft any able-bodied male citizen responsible for any of these shocking delinquencies, and I shall find means to deal effectively with those unfit for Army service. I shall make no further effort to restrain Congress from legislating strong correctives. I have been patient, too patient perhaps. From now on you may count on me to enforce a true equality of sacrifice and effort, as comparable to your own as I can make it."

But—it must be repeated—this is only a flight of fancy.

COTTON A VITAL FACTOR IN WAR

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a round-table discussion entitled "The Farmer and Victory," by Chris Christensen, T. W. Schultz, and William Spencer. The discussion took place at Chicago.

Mr. Christensen is the dean of the college of agriculture and director of the agricultural experimental station and extension service of the University of Wisconsin. Mr. Schultz is professor and head of the department of economics at Iowa State College. Mr. Spencer is the dean of business at the University of Chicago. At present he is on leave from the university, to act as director of the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. President, the discussion of the farmer and victory by these three professors absolutely amazes me. I quote first from Mr. Schultz, page 2:

Mr. SCHULTZ. We just throw those figures at ourselves all the time. There has been a very credible—

He says "credible," but I know he means "creditable"— record, I grant, in some parts of agriculture, but look at the fact that virtually half of agriculture, in terms of people, is in the South, and cotton is not needed for the war.

A college professor, a professor at an agricultural college, is making the statement that cotton is not needed for the war.

Again Mr. Schultz, on page 12 of the pamphlet, says:

Mr. SCHULTZ. You would in the case of wheat. You would in the case of several of th products that I mentioned. Let's take cotton for just a second in that connection.

A second must have been all the time they ever devoted to cotton in their entire lives.

Here we have an economy which involves almost half of the farm people of the United States. We've got so large a stock of cotton carry-over that if we didn't produce any short-staple cotton next year we'd still have plenty. You could take all the 1943 crop and dump it in the Gulf of Mexico, and you wouldn't hurt the war effort one iota.

Think of a professor of agriculture in a college making a statement of that kind, and sending it over the radio, if you please, apparently with the approval of a member of the War Manpower Commission set up in Washington.

Furthermore, we're going to use a lot of ships to bring in fertilizer from Chile to grow more cotton. That simply doesn't make sense.

Again on page 20 Mr. Spencer gives voice to this remarkable statement:

Mr. SPENCER. Gentlemen, we are agreed that the consumer has a heavy responsibility in helping the farmer do his job of producing more food as a war weapon. Certainly agriculture as a whole, notably the Cotton Belt, is not now on a wartime basis.

We are agreed that we must produce more fighting foods.

Listen to this:

We must produce more fighting foods, such as meat, dairy products, eggs, peas, peanuts, and soya beans.

We are agreed that in some regions and in some agricultural activities farm workers are not now being fully utilized.

We're not agreed fully as to how far the increased prices for farmers will solve this problem. We do believe that removing some of the loans on cotton production, and perhaps even in wheat, may help out, but we still will have left, after that is done, a problem of recruiting and allocating and training farmers with farm experience in order to get the food that we need.

After reading these statements of these three agricultural professors, so-called, I am wondering if some of our colleges are putting a premium on ignorance.

Of all the ignorant discussions I have ever read or heard of concerning a great agricultural product, none excels in ignorance this discussion by the three professors about cotton. It is remarkable that a man claiming to be a professor of agriculture could be such an ignoramus about one of the greatest food crops in the world. All three seem to be agreed, from the foregoing excerpts in the pamphlet that cotton is of no food value. I suppose these professors must imagine that lint cotton only is grown. I do not suppose they ever heard of cottonseed or its value as food.

Ordinarily 1,600 pounds of short-staple cotton produce about 500 pounds of lint or, as we used to say in the far South, 1,600 pounds of seed cotton to the bale. Mind you, Mr. President, two-thirds of this cotton is composed of cottonseed. The oils and fats from cottonseed are infinitely more extensive, infinitely better as a fighting food than some of the products suggested by the three learned professors of agriculture.

The kernels of cottonseed contain the richest oil fats. The oil is used in the Army as well as in civiliar life. From the fat of these seeds are made lard, butter, and all the modern shortenings which are in common use, not in one State alone, not in one section alone, but all over the country. They are used in New England, they are used in the West, they are used in the Middle West, they are used right there in Chicago, and, while these gentlemen may not know it, every day of their lives, in one form or another, they eat cottonseed which they say has no food value of any kind. Furthermore, the hulls of the cottonseeds are ground and produce cattle feed which in turn produces all kinds of dairy commodities.

Mr. President, if I were inclined to be critical I would say that the ignorance of these three agricultural college professors is monumental. Probably, that, however, would be saying too much for them. They talk as if lint cotton grew by itself on the cotton plant and that such lint cotton was valueless to the world. I shall discuss that later.

I want to say first, without fear of successful contradiction, that no food products are more necessary in this war than oils and fats and that our principal oils and fats come from cotton, the three radio agricultural professors at Chicago to the contrary notwithstanding. Of course, substantially, we now get no vegetable oils from abroad at all. The supply of vegetable oil from the Far East, principally copra, was very great, but since the war these supplies of vegetable oils have ceased, so that we are now dependent upon our own vegetable oils. Until last year the quantity of vegetable oils from cottonseed was substantially as large as from all other sources combined. This year soya-bean oil is slightly ahead of cottonseed oil. In terms of pounds of meal the proportions are soya bean, 1,350,000,000 pounds; cottonseed, 1,250,000,000 pounds; flaxseed, 1,500,000 pounds; peanuts, 1,250,000 pounds. In any event, it can be safely said that more than one-third of all our vegetable oils and fats come from cottonseed. I imagine that the three agricultural professors at Chicago did not know that cotton came from seed and that two-thirds of cotton in the seed is composed of the seed. Perhaps they had never heard of cottonseed oil mills and refineries. They probably thought that lard, oleomargarine, and all other shortenings were hog lard. Of course, they did not understand that they themselves ate this product in their everyday lives and that it would have been bad for them individually for all the cotton crop of 1943 to be dumped in the Gulf of Mexico. It would not only hurt the war effort tremendously, but it would hurt as well the three radio farmers of Chicago.

COTTON NOT NEEDED IN THE WAR

Mr. President, I take up first the statements of these three radio farmers that "cotton is not needed for the war."

I wonder what sort of clothes the three radio farmers of Chicago wear. I wonder what sort of clothes they think the boys in the Army wear. Substantially, every shirt the soldier wears is made of cotton. Every undershirt, every pair of socks, the bag in which he carries his clothes, every piece of under apparel he wears or he uses is made mostly of cotton. The khaki uniform he wears is made of cotton. It is remarkable that any person who went to school for as much as a year does not know these facts, and yet the three radio agricultural experts at Chicago seem not to know it.

Perhaps they think that all the clothes of the soldiers are made of silk obtained from our enemy, Japan. I do not know how else they could think that our soldiers would be clothed, unless they were under the delusion that, like Mr. Jiggs, all of them wore red flannel underclothes.

Of course, they wear woolen clothes, too, but without cotton they could not go very far in the way of dress, and if the cotton crop were placed in the Gulf of Mexico, our soldiers at home and abroad, as well as our civilians, would be in a sad plight, the three radio experts at Chicago to the contrary notwithstanding.

FOOD USES OF COTTON

Cottonseed oil is used in butter making, the making of oleomargarine, and in the making of a great variety of compounds containing animal fat, as well as in the making of hydrogenated vegetable cooking fats. It is used for the manufacture of soaps, for lotions, creams, artificial leather, linoleum, explosives, paint, and medicine. Not only that, Mr. President, the meal and hulls are used for stock feed to greatly increase our supply of cattle, poultry, sheep, and hogs. They are used as fertilizers, and for all kinds of feed products. The oil is used for dyestuffs, but its greatest value is in foodstuffs.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I was waiting for the Senator to address himself to the use of cottonseed in the preparation of cottonseed meal and cake for the cattle industry, and hence in the production of beef. I wanted to tell the Senator that I have received several telegrams from New Mexico, which is a cattle-producing State, demanding to know why the cattle raisers there cannot buy cottonseed meal and cake to feed cattle, stating that there apparently is a shortage. Will the Senator please explain that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Explain the shortage?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. I understood the Senator to say that the college professors were proposing that the cotton be dumped into the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. McKELLAR. They say it could be dumped into the Gulf of Mexico without hurting the war effort. I am merely enumerating the hundreds of uses of cotton, among them the feeding of cattle, the feeding of sheep, even the feeding of hogs, for hogs, too, eat cottonseed meal. It is good food for man and beast.

Mr. HATCH. The point I was making was that apparently, from the messages I have received from my State, there is now a shortage of that product.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; yet these three farmer professors in Chicago, who broadcast over the radio, and who are connected with the War Manpower Commission, say that if all this year's crop, the 1943 crop, were dumped into the Gulf of Mexico, the war effort would not be hurt a bit. I wonder where the Senator's constituents would get the cottonseed meal and hulls with which to feed cattle in his State, if all that crop were dumped into the Gulf of Mexico. There would be difficulty in getting feed for stock.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator has been speaking facetiously, but he is discussing a very serious matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am discussing one of the most serious food situations in this country. The cottonseed crop is one of the most important of all the food crops at this time, not only in itself, but for the oils and fats which come from it, as well as because of its use in the production of meat for the whole country.

Mr. President, linters are the fiber of cotton immediately around the seed, a very short, fuzzy fiber, not over one-sixteenth or at most an eighth of an inch long, which is used for the making of gunpowder. I wonder where these three agricultural radio professors at Chicago, who are advising the American people about this matter, would get the material out of which to make gunpowder if it were not for the vast amount of linters that are taken from the cottonseed meal after the lint cotton is ginned.

If the cotton crop of 1943 were dumped into the Gulf of Mexico, I wonder what the gunpowder industry in our country would do.

These professors say cotton is not helpful to the war effort. What ridiculous nonsense. Linters not only are used exclusively at the present time in making gunpowder, but they are commandeered already by the Government. All the linters of last year's crop, and, as I understand, of this year's crop, have already been commandeered by the Government for the making of gunpowder. Yet these three professors are talking about cotton not being of value to the war effort.

In ordinary times linters are used for the upholstery of furniture and automobiles, yarns, mops, cordage, wicks, and for the manufacture of cellulose, rayon, lacquers, cellophane, and plastics. The three agricultural college professors and radio experts would not be able to function with the movies if all the cotton were dumped into the Gulf of Mexico.

There are hundreds of different uses to which both the cotton and the cottonseed products are put, notwithstanding the statements of our three radio professors.

Mr. President, in conclusion I may say that no one knows where these statements come from, and we do not know anything about them, and I would not have said anything about them but for these three men broadcasting over the radio, one of them connected with the War Manpower Commission, talking about throwing the entire cotton crop into the Gulf of Mexico, and saying that it would not hurt the war effort at all. I thought someone should call attention to this matter.

BUREAUCRATIC CONTROL OF FARMS

Mr. President, I wish now to draw attention to another matter and to put into the RECORD two or three letters which I have here, one of which I read:

SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM,
LOCAL BOARD NO. 1,
Lauderdale County, February 18, 1943.

Mr. M. L. PIPER,
Ripley, Tenn.

DEAR MR. PIPER: The Lauderdale County Local Board No. 1 would like to notify you that your farm labor does not meet the requirements necessary to classify your farm as an essential farm. If you will check this at the local board office, we will be glad to help you adjust this situation, so that your essential farm help will not be drafted from your farm.

Very truly yours,
J. N. WYATT, Chairman.

I shall read an extract from a letter written by the owner of the 2,400-acre farm referred to in this letter, stating what it contains—though it is said it does not come within the war effort:

The farm that this letter is directed to is only about 112 to 115 years old—

He is very much mistaken about that; the land is older than that—

The farm that this letter is directed to is only about 112 to 115 years old, situated 4 or 5 miles out of Ripley, Tenn., and has only been owned by three different people—the first owner being a man by the name of Oldham, then the J. T. Fargasons, of Memphis, owned it, and now myself. This farm consists of about 2,400 acres and has been a stock farm for the last 60 years. On January 1, in making up our inventory, we had 309 head of cattle and 200 head of hogs. We grew the following crops in 1942: About 250 bales of cotton, 12,000 to 14,000 bushels of corn, about 100 acres of soybeans, 5,000 bushels of oats, a small acreage of wheat, and pasture of various kinds for the stock mentioned. During December and January we marketed from 25,000 to 30,000 pounds of meat, we furnished in the neighborhood of 100 tons of cottonseed for oils and other purposes, and yet this board says that this farm is not classified as an essential farm. If it is not, I would like to know what it would take to make it essential.

I ask that the entire letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOODS LUMBER CO.,
Memphis, Tenn., February 22, 1943.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing a letter from the Selective Service System, the same being with reference to a farm near Ripley, Tenn., in Lauderdale County. My reason for writing this letter is to give you an idea of what the public is having to put up with with the different agencies governing farms and other works.

The farm that this letter is directed to is only about 112 to 115 years old, situated four or five miles out of Ripley, Tenn., and has only been owned by three different people—the first owner being a man by the name of Oldham, then the J. T. Fargasons, of Memphis, owned it, and now myself. This farm consists of about 2,400 acres and has been a stock farm for the last 60 years. On January 1, in making up our inventory, we had 309 head of cattle and 200 head of hogs. We grew the following crops in 1942: About 250 bales of cotton, 12,000 to 14,000 bushels of corn, about 100 acres of soybeans, 5,000 bushels of oats, a small acreage of wheat, and pasture of various kinds for the stock mentioned. During December and January we marketed from 25,000 to 30,000 pounds of meat, we furnished in the neighborhood of 100 tons of cottonseed for oils and other purposes, and yet this board says that this farm is not classified as an essential farm. If it is not, I would like to know what it would take to make it essential.

This is one of many such things that we are up against in the way of committees, boards, regulators, and dictators, which are doing more harm than the public can do good. There are millions of working hours lost in trying to do business with the many agencies that have been set up in the past few years. I am one who would quit trying to do anything if we were not at war until such things were corrected.

We bought the farm referred to about a year ago, and during the year we have marketed over 200 head of hogs and in the neighborhood of 120 to 125 head of cattle in addition to the crops above referred to. We also operate two sawmills and furnish the majority of our output for Government purposes. We have some additional farm interests in Arkansas, with which it very nearly keeps a man busy going to the county agencies and different regulating boards to try to do business. Much of this was set up before we were at war.

I am one who is ready and willing to, and am doing everything in my power to promote war against our enemies, but we find many things done by Government agencies that are detrimental and retard instead of being a benefit, in the way of causing time lost, circulars to be filled out, reports to be made that do not amount to as much as the paper they are written on, for a majority of the agencies that are set up never had 5 cents' worth of business in their lives, would not know what a pay roll was if they were to see one, and there are thousands sitting back in a big, easy chair in front of a desk that do not do anything but put in time and draw the Government pay. Our armed forces could be increased by several hundred thousand if they were put in the Army instead of put behind a desk, and maybe could do something to promote our war effort.

I am writing this letter in the kindest of spirit, but giving facts as we see them, and we think something should be done in this way to encourage the public to produce instead of taking up their time with inexperienced people making reports.

I hope you will pardon my writing you this long letter.

Yours very truly,
EUGENE WOODS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is what comes from legislation by bureaus. This shows the action of a bureau chief, small, it is true, but a bureau chief. The information used comes from Washington. He says that a 2,400-acre farm, producing all those foodstuffs, including cotton, is not essential to the war effort! When I think of it, I feel that perhaps we should abolish all the bureaus, without exception. We would hardly make a mistake.

MANPOWER AND THE FARM-LABOR PROBLEM

Now, Mr. President, I wish to refer to something else, and it will take me but a moment.

I have obtained from the Washington News an article about bureaucratic farming which I wish to read. On page 26 I find the headline "McNutt's job safe, says man whose orders turned on heat." The article reads:

Picking on War Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt has taken on the proportions of a national pastime during the last fortnight—yet the man who initiated most of these "directives" which fanned up this fury so far has escaped the heat.

He is Fowler Harper, deputy War Manpower Commission chairman and former professor at Indiana University law school, where Mr. McNutt was one-time dean.

Mr. Harper was the first of a long line of Hoosier schoolmen Mr. McNutt brought to Washington. Professor Harper's first assignment was as general counsel for the Federal Security Agency. He took that position shortly after Mr. McNutt was made administrator. Later he returned to Indiana University, but made weekly trips here as one of the expert professional "consultants."

Let me state what I understand these consultants to be. Senators will recall that we had much to say last year about travel pay. We could not conceive how the travel pay had grown. I am told it grew up in this way: The bureaucrats here, when they did not know what they wanted to do, would call for an expert consultant to come. The consultant would come here and put up at a hotel, his entire expenses would be paid at the hotel, his mileage would be paid, then he would get $23 a day, as I remember the amount, for the time he remained here. Sometimes he would stay a week, sometimes a month, sometimes 6 months. It was wholly indefinite, merely another way of putting on employees. But that was not what I desired to discuss.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying about the pay of consultants. He says they were paid $23 a day.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the testimony before our committee, as I remember it.

Mr. HATCH. They had no fixed salary whatever?

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand a sort of consensus of opinion has grown up in the bureaucracies that reputable consultants should be paid $23 a day.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, but they were not on a regular annual salary basis?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. They were on a per diem basis?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, and it is placed under the head of "Travel pay." That is why the travel-pay item looks so large. I give this as a prelude to what follows, and I wish Senators would listen to what Mr. Harper said about the way they manage picking the cotton crop:

We can send thousands of sharecroppers and others from Arkansas and Tennessee to do this work.

I ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] to think about that. We all remember the provision of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. I think I can quote it fairly accurately:

Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude * * * shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

I continue to read what Mr. Harper said:

We can send thousands of sharecroppers and others from Arkansas and Tennessee to do this work—

Mr. Harper explained—

But the cotton planters do not want them, although they seem willing to take Mexicans.

I do not know what the situation is in Arizona.

Mr. HATCH. All I can say about my own State of New Mexico is that the only problem of labor we have is getting sufficient labor. There is no preference anywhere.

Mr. McKELLAR. I continue to read:

But the cotton planters do not want them, although they seem willing to take Mexicans. All we ask is that they pay them 30 cents an hour, which is what the Mexicans got last year. Surely Americans should be as adequately paid as this imported labor and the price is not so high compared with wartime cost of living.

Mr. Harper feels that absenteeism is the latest overworked word of the wartime critics.

Mr. President, I am not criticizing the war. I think the war is progressing well. I am delighted at the way the war is proceeding. I am a thousand percent for it. The main business in this country is to defeat Hitler and the Japanese and the—well, the poor Italians need hardly to be mentioned, because they are already defeated. The great thing is to win the war. But I am opposed to involuntary servitude anywhere in the United States.

I was not old enough to take part in the enactment of the thirteenth amendment, but I am for it. I am for the whole Constitution. I think it is just as effective in war as it is in time of peace. I am for the Constitution a thousand percent. I want the Government conducted under the protection of the Constitution, and under the protection of all of it, and I say that the War Manpower Commission, and no other commission, has a right to take people from Tennessee and Arkansas—I refer to those States simply because they are mentioned in the article from which I am reading—and send them someplace else where the War Manpower Commission may think it is better for the people generally to take them.

I am opposed to involuntary servitude, and I regret that the War Manpower Commission gives out such a report as this.

In order that there may be no mistake about the matter, I ask unanimous consent that the article in question be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

HE'S NOT TOO MUCH CONCERNED—MCNUTT'S JOB SAFE, SAYS MAN WHOSE ORDERS TURNED ON HEAT

(By Daniel M. Kidney)

Picking on War Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt has taken on the proportions of a national pastime during the last fortnight—yet the man who initiated most of the "directives" which fanned up this fury so far has escaped the heat.

He is Fowler Harper, deputy War Manpower Commission Chairman and former professor at Indiana University law school, where Mr. McNutt was one-time dean.

Mr. Harper was the first of a long list of Hoosier schoolmen Mr. McNutt brought to Washington. Professor Harper's first assignment was as general counsel for the Federal Security Agency. He took that position shortly after Mr. McNutt was made administrator. Later he returned to Indiana University, but made weekly trips here as one of the expert professional "consultants."

Like other New Deal and pro-labor professors, he was named as a public representative on one of the War Labor Board panels.

Finally he returned here for his present full-time job as War Manpower Commission deputy chieftain, a $9,000 post.

KNOWS LABOR LEADERS

In these various roles he has become well acquainted with industrial labor leaders from coast to coast and often confers with them, as well as with management, regarding manpower problems.

These contacts in the field have served to develop the present War Manpower Commission program which is causing much controversy in Congress and throughout the country. Mr. Harper isn't especially perturbed by the criticism, and says he feels there is not much substance to the various reports that Mr. McNutt is to be replaced.

"The last Congress kept nagging Mr. McNutt for not doing anything," Mr. Harper said. "Now they are nagging him about his doing too much. The 48-hour week and the work-or-fight plan are things which inherently develop pressures. So this heat is not unexpected and might even be called legitimate.

COMPLEX JOB

"Ours is an incredibly complex job and whatever we do will be tough on various groups affected. Classifying certain jobs as not necessary in wartime is bound to make persons employed in such fields resentful. But if this is an all-out war, we have to go all-out to win it and that means using every bit of manpower for its best wartime purposes."

An example of the power now wielded by War Manpower Commission is the fact that the Army rescinded its order to send several thousand troops into Arizona to pick cotton when Mr. Harper protested to both the War Department and Agriculture.

"We can send thousands of sharecroppers and others from Arkansas and Tennessee to do this work," Mr. Harper explained. But the cotton planters do not want them, although they seem willing to take Mexicans. All we ask is that they pay them 30 cents an hour, which is what the Mexicans got last year. Surely Americans should be as adequately paid as this imported labor and the price is not so high compared with wartime cost of living."

Mr. Harper feels that absenteeism is the latest overworked word of the wartime critics.

NOT LIKED BY POLITICOS

"We have been working on that problem for many months," he said. "Through the cooperation of union labor and management I established a program in the lumber industry at Seattle which has worked out extremely well. These are things which we are doing all the time."

Professor Harper isn't the kind of person who ever will do much to make the former Governor of Indiana a President of the United States. He almost automatically arouses the prejudice of the type of democratic politicians who control conventions.

Frank M. McHale, Indianapolis attorney and the 1940 manager of the McNutt-for-President campaign, probably wouldn't call on Paul if he thought Professor Harper was in the same building.

Having spent all his life in school or teaching, until he took up new dealing on the McNutt staff, he has none of the "don't take life too seriously" of the politico who came up from the post of precinct committeeman.

Mr. Harper is married and has a daughter in high school here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before I take my seat I wish to say that my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], one of the best legislators we have, has come into the Chamber, and I should like to ask him whether he is in favor of the War Manpower Commission taking laborers in Arkansas and Tennessee and bringing them out to his State, with or without their consent, and putting them to work picking cotton in his State? I do not believe the Senator is.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course not. What actually happened was that there was a shortage of labor to gather the Arizona cotton crop. The Farm Security Administration recruited some, but not enough, cotton pickers in various parts of the United States; some in Arkansas, some in Missouri, some in Tennessee, and more from Texas. They came out to Arizona after the cotton was ready to be picked, and as everyone who has had any experience in cotton picking knows, when most of the cotton bolls are fully open a man can pick more pounds of cotton per day, because there is more available cotton on each cotton plant. Particularly is that true of the long-staple cotton, which sometimes grows nearly 6 feet high.

The cotton does not all ripen at the same time. So pickers have to go back at a later date and make a second picking.

In the second picking the picker cannot make as much money per day, because he has to go to more plants to get the cotton. In the third picking, the last of the crop, he cannot make nearly as much each day as he could in the first picking.

The persons who were imported from other States came out and picked the first part of the Arizona cotton crop, but when it came down to the third picking they were not there, because they could not make the big money that they had earlier in the season. That is the truth about it.

It was officially reported to me that on the 11th day of February, there were 7,500 bales of extra long-staple American-Egyptian cotton, planted at the request of the Army, which is needed to make blimps, which is needed to make parachute cloth, which had not been picked. There also was 13,000 bales of Acala cotton, the staple of which is about an inch long, that had not been picked on that date. All of both varieties of Arizona cotton that should have been at the gins under normal conditions around Christmastime, certainly by the 15th of January. It was not picked by the middle of February, and some of it will not be picked at all, but will be lost.

Mr. McKELLAR. There will not be a great deal of it, will there? As I understand there were 7,000 bales of the long-staple cotton not picked?

Mr. HAYDEN. About 7,500 bales had not been picked two and a half weeks ago, and the time for planting this years crop is practically at hand.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arizona recalls seeing in the newspapers that it was first thought to send the Army out there to pick the cotton, but it was found that there was not enough cotton to justify such an attempt.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me explain the Army feature of the situation to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. HAYDEN. About 3 weeks ago General McNarney, the Assistant Chief of Staff, made the statement that the Army would not agree to furlough individual soldiers to engage in the harvesting of crops but that the Army would make military organizations available to assist in the harvests; that is, send them out to the farms by companies or battalions. A statement to the same effect was made, I think, on the following day by General Marshall. Realizing that this idea of harvesting crops by organized bodies of troops was something new and untried, I made the suggestion to General McNarney that as an experiment, in order to find out how to do it, some of the extra long staple cotton planted in Arizona at the request of the War Department be picked. I did not argue that it was necessarily an emergency matter, because perhaps a considerable part of it could be picked in the course of time, and what was lost in any event would not be an enormous quantity. But I did insist that any new scheme has to be tried out, just like any newly invented machine, for, as the mechanical engineers say, there are always "bugs" in it that have to be worked out.

If soldiers go out to help farmers harvest their crop, the first question is, Shall the grower pay as much for the service rendered as he would pay to anyone else who gathered it, whether it be corn, wheat, soybeans, or cotton? Everyone who stops to think about the matter would not hesitate to say that the farmer should not gain by having soldiers perform the work at a cheaper rate than if it were done by civilians.

The second question is this. When the farmer has paid for the harvesting work, who gets the money? Does the soldier who personally picks the cotton get the money? Or does it go into the Treasury of the United States? My suggestion was that it go into the company funds, so that the soldiers could buy more boxing gloves, or baseball bats, or perhaps have better Christmas dinners, or for any other purpose for which company funds are maintained. It was distinctly understood that no military organization was to be engaged in harvesting crops for any very long period of time so that the sums paid into the various company funds would not be excessive.

The next proposition is: How are the soldiers to be transported from where they are to the place where they do the work? The place where the fields to be harvested are located may be nearby some Army camp to which the soldiers can return at the end of each day. In the case of the wheat harvest it may be that they may have to be taken many hundreds of miles. There is the problem of transportation, the problem of what shall be taken along in the way of tentage and equipment and how the soldiers are to be fed. It is obvious that there are many details to be worked out in a practical way.

My suggestion to the War Department was not wait until next summer or fall when some great emergency arises, but that the services of soldiers be utilized in an experimental way by gathering the remainder of a crop of cotton, every bale of which the Army very greatly needs for blimps, for parachutes, and for other types of equipment where great tensile strength is required. That was the essence of my proposal. It was agreed to by the Army, and was agreed to by the officials of the Department of Agriculture directly in charge of the procurement of farm labor. The objection came from Mr. Harper of the War Manpower Commission. He knew nothing of the facts upon which the proposal was based. But he had not been consulted, and he therefore objected to anything being done. As a result of his personal intervention the order authorizing the use of troops to assist in the picking of long staple American-Egyptian cotton in Arizona was canceled.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is another case of bureaucracy. Let me say to the able Senator from Arizona that if he, as a boy, had experience in the picking of cotton, as I did, he will recall that the first crop is very nearly the best; the middle crop is the second best, and the last crop, which is known in cotton parlance as the "top crop," looks very much better than it is. I should not be surprised if the Senator's estimate concerning the top crop of cotton in Arizona is much less than 7,000 bales. I am also sure that if the Senator has had experience with cotton, as I have had, he knows that the statement which I have made is true. The so-called top crop looks better than it really is.

Mr. HAYDEN. My information came directly from the chairman of the Department of Agriculture war board in Arizona. I asked him to make a check and give me an accurate report. I have confidence in his figures. Whether the unpicked crop is 2,000 bales, 5,000, or 7,000, it offers an excellent opportunity to try out an experiment and ascertain whether soldiers in organizations can successfully harvest crops. There is grave doubt in my mind about that. I do not believe that the use of a company of soldiers, only a few of whom may have at any time picked cotton, would be very efficient. That is particularly true with regard to the harvesting of wheat, when it is necessary to use binders and combines, the handling of which requires skill and experience with agricultural machinery. The only way to find out is actually to make the experiment. My idea is that by a process of trial and error the Army can find out whether the use of companies of soldiers to harvest crops is a worth-while way of proceeding. If it proves not to be satisfactory, we will all know that some other method will have to be adopted when a real harvesting crisis arises next summer or next fall. That is the whole idea I had in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a part of my remarks on this very interesting subject I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing on page 8 of today's Washington Daily News, written by Mr. Arthur F. DeGreve, quoting Mr. Bernard Baruch. He expresses the same view I hold regarding involuntary servitude and commandeered labor.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUT HE BELIEVES IN WORK OR FIGHT—BARUCH STILL BRANDS LABOR DRAFT SLAVERY

(By Arthur F. DeGreve)

Bernard M. Baruch, adviser to Presidents and one-time international financier, clings to his belief of nearly a quarter of a century—that it would be impossible and dangerous to attempt to draft labor for war work. But he also is still convinced that labor can be compelled to work or fight.

The white-haired Baruch received this correspondent in the hotel suite he uses as an office when the weather precludes conferences in a nearby park. The interview came as a Senate committee prepared to begin hearings on the Austin-Wadsworth bill which would draft, with some exceptions, all men between 18 and 65 and women between 18 and 50 for war work if they did not volunteer.

CLEARLY * * * SLAVERY

Baruch said his views are the same as those he expressed to Congress in World War No. 1, when he headed the War Industries Board, and in a memorandum to a joint congressional and Cabinet commission on organization for war in 1931.

"We have heard a good deal of a slogan: Draft every dollar, everything and every man," he said 12 years ago. "The attempt to draft labor is * * * impossible and dangerous * * * a soldier serves the Nation directly. There is but one master in the case and that master is America. He serves to profit no one but the country as a whole. There is no distinction between him and his comrades. He enters an immemorial status. His destiny is not contractual. He is clothed, fed, housed, and attended."

Baruch contended that industry is in the hands of millions of private employers and its employees, therefore, serve in private industry operating for gain.

"Enforced and voluntary services for a private master is and has been clearly and repeatedly defined by our Supreme Court as slavery," he pointed out.

BEATS CHAIN GANG

While the Government cannot say to an employee, "work here, work there," Baruch emphasized that it can say "work or fight." He noted that this principle was barely invoked in the First World War and is capable of immense expansion.

"The work or fight method," he declared, "is compatible with our present institutions and far more effective than any chain-gang impression that could be invented."

He feels that strict application of a work or fight policy would go far toward solving absenteeism and unauthorized strikes.

Baruch has no official status but is credited with considerable influence on home-front war policies. He is a close friend of Stabilizer Byrnes and Chairman Harry Hopkins of the Munitions Assignment Board—two of President's Roosevelt's closest advisers.

HINTED FOR WAR PRODUCTION BOARD HELM

Recently, when Production Chief Nelson struggled with the services over control of arms scheduling, it was reported that the President would remove Nelson and appoint Baruch as his successor. Subsequently it was reported that Baruch would be named to a new superboard to handle broad policies affecting the civilian economy.

Friends said today that Baruch is seeking no wartime Government job, but they added that he feels he could not refuse to serve in any capacity if called upon by the President.

INCREASE IN PAY OF POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 17) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Chair state the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I believe I should clear the record on at least two points which were mentioned by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. He made reference to what he thought might be a critical paragraph in the minority views. I wish to assure him that it was not a criticism of his conduct of the committee business, or his leadership of the committee. As I have already stated, I applaud his leadership. I appreciate the way in which he has devoted his time and attention to the work of the committee. I found it necessary merely to make mention of the situation outlined in the report for the reason that I was submitting the report of a minority, and I thought that unless I made some reference in the report to the attendance at the meeting at which the issue was raised, my report as a minority of one might be misunderstood.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the question is appropriate. It is agreed, is it not, that the Senator did not submit his substitute at the time the bill was under consideration by the committee?

Mr. BURTON. No, Mr. President. At the committee meeting I asked that a vote be taken upon the very question which I am presenting here. I did not have the proposal in writing, but I asked that the same provisions that were in House bill 6386 be reported. My request was voted down by a vote of 3 to 1. I was emphasizing the smallness of the attendance, in a committee of 15, to justify the minority report of one.

Turning to another point, the Senator referred to the action of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I do not wish to spend much time on that question except to say that in their letter of February 6, 1943, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD, the Commissioners stated that they are not opposing raises in pay. They are recommending the passage of my substitute, and they quote in their letter the statement which they made in January 1942 when a similar situation was before them. They based their objection on the discrimination which would have resulted from the passage of House bill 6386 at that time, which discrimination would not exist if my proposal should be adopted. I quote the following paragraph from their letter of January 22, 1942, which is quoted in their letter of February 6, 1943:

> The Commissioners take the position that if the rise in the cost of living in the District of Columbia justifies increases in basic salaries, such increases should be only for the duration of the national emergency, or so long as the high cost of living prevails, should be on a percentage basis and should apply to all affected by the cost of living in the District.

Since that time the increased cost of living has been met for other employees of the District of Columbia by the 10-percent bonus provision. Therefore, I believe that my substitute is directly in line with the steps previously taken by the Congress. The reason the President vetoed the previous bill was because he differed with the general policy of the Congress at that time to make the increase permanent and to date it back to an earlier date.

The gist of my argument is that the police and fire departments need an increase. We voted an increase last December on a permanent basis. It was recommended by the department on a permanent basis. I urge the renewal of that vote. I have shown that the proposed rates of pay, even when adjusted to the cost of living, are consistent with the rates of pay in cities comparable to the District of Columbia. As we approach the question at the present time, if we adopt the committee bill the rates of pay will be out of line with those of District employees who are receiving the 10-percent bonus; they will be out of line with the pay of employees of the United States Government who are receiving the 10-percent bonus. Representing the Committee on Civil Service, which is discussing these matters, I think I should urge the point that we should not go out of line in our discussions, based on what is good for the whole United States, and for the other employees of the District of Columbia at the present time. But if different consideration is to be given the District of Columbia, it should be done only after the whole question has been considered by the Congress. Therefore, I urge that the Senate repeat the step previously taken. In doing so we will justify the District of Columbia Commissioners in declining to increase the cost by 50 percent, as would be the case if the proposal of the majority of the committee were adopted.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the proposed substitute amendment because it is in line with what we have done for other Federal employees as well as for other employees of the District of Columbia. To do otherwise would be out of line with what has already been done.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia dated February 6, 1943, to which reference has already been made.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 6, 1943.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Senate District Committee,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have given consideration to S. 17, a bill "Providing for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia."

At the time of the preliminary meeting of your committee, the Commissioners suggested as a substitute for S. 17 a bill which would grant to members of the Police and Fire Departments an increase in pay conforming strictly with the standards established by Joint Resolution 170, namely, 10 percent of the pay of any member of either organization up to and including $2,900, with a proviso that in no event should any member receive additional compensation which would make his pay exceed $5,000. The Commissioners recognized the equity of an increase in pay for the members of the Police and Fire Departments, but felt that any increase granted them should conform to Joint Resolution 170. The substitute proposal of the Commissioners would give to the Police and Fire Departments an increase commensurate with that accorded the classified employees of the District, and would do away with the discrimination which would result from the passage of S. 17. In addition, the proposal of the Commissioners would satisfy the principal objections of the President to H. R. 6386 in that the substitute bill would make the increase effective as of December 1, 1942 (instead as of February 1, 1942), and would provide that the increase should continue for a temporary period.

Since the meeting of your committee at which S. 17 and the proposal of the Commissioners were discussed, two additional substitutes have been suggested, one of which would increase the pay of each policeman and fireman by $350, up to and including Inspectors in the Police Department and Battalion Chiefs in the Fire Department (resulting in an over-all increase of approximately 15 percent), and the other a substitute bill by Senator BURTON which is substantially the same as H. R. 6386, which passed the Congress but was vetoed by the President with the suggestion that with the elimination of certain objectionable features the President would be favorable to the legislation therein proposed.

The objections of the President have been met by the substitute proposed by Senator BURTON, in that the substitute would provide for a temporary, instead of a permanent, increase, and make such increase effective as of December 1, 1942 (instead of February 1, 1942). Furthermore, bills are now pending before the Congress which would provide for an increase in pay for school teachers, which would remove the final objection of the President. The substitute likewise conforms substantially to Joint Resolution 170 by providing for an over-all increase of approximately 10 percent, and on a temporary basis.

The Commissioners, in their report to the chairman of the House District Committee on January 22, 1942, objecting to the passage of H. R. 6386, stated in part as follows:

"As stated in our report on the former bill, if it is fairly established that living costs in the District of Columbia have risen sufficiently to justify increases in the pay of firemen and policemen, such facts would also justify increases in the salaries of other District employees, as well as employees of the Federal Government. The proposed legislation aids a select few without regard to the level of compensation of other employees.

"The Commissioners take the position that if the rise in the cost of living in the District of Columbia justifies increases in basic salaries, such increases should be only for the duration of the national emergency, or so long as the higher cost of living prevails, should be on a percentage basis, and should apply to all affected by the cost of living in the District."

These objections have been removed by the passage of Joint Resolution 170, which provides for a temporary increase in pay for a substantial number of District employees, and the amendments made to H. R. 6386 in the proposed substitute of Senator BURTON.

The Commissioners recommend, therefore, that the substitute bill proposed by Senator BURTON be adopted.

Respectfully,

———, President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Gerry | O'Mahoney |
| Austin | Gillette | Overton |
| Ball | Green | Radcliffe |
| Bankhead | Guffey | Reed |
| Barbour | Gurney | Revercomb |
| Barkley | Hatch | Reynolds |
| Bone | Hawkes | Russell |
| Brewster | Hill | Stewart |
| Brooks | Holman | Taft |
| Buck | Johnson, Colo. | Thomas, Idaho |
| Burton | La Follette | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bushfield | Langer | Thomas, Utah |
| Butler | Lodge | Truman |
| Byrd | Lucas | Tunnell |
| Capper | McCarran | Tydings |
| Caraway | McKellar | Vandenberg |
| Chavez | Maloney | Wagner |
| Clark, Idaho | Maybank | Wallgren |
| Danaher | Mead | Walsh |
| Davis | Millikin | Wheeler |
| Eastland | Moore | Wherry |
| Ellender | Murray | White |
| Ferguson | Nye | Wiley |
| George | O'Daniel | Wilson |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment proposed by the committee.

On this question the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has demanded the yeas and nays. Is the request sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], the Senators from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN and Mr. McFARLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness. If present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—40

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Gerry | Revercomb |
| Austin | Green | Russell |
| Ball | Guffey | Taft |

So Mr. BURTON'S amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill S. 17 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY ADJUSTMENT OF SALARIES FOR TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 18, providing for temporary adjustment of salaries of teachers in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 18) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries for teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries for teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That any employee of the municipal government of the District of Columbia whose rate of compensation is covered by the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and as further amended by Public Law No. 188 of the Sixty-eighth Congress, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, shall be paid additional compensation at a rate of $350 per annum: Provided, That each such employee shall be paid only such additional compensation or portion thereof as will not cause his aggregate compensation to exceed a rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall take effect as of December 1, 1942, and remain in effect for the duration of the present war and for 6 months thereafter.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all except the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That teachers and all other educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia whose salaries are fixed in the Teachers Salary Act, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, shall be paid additional compensation amounting to 10 percent of so much of their earned basic compensation as is not in excess of a rate of $2,900 per annum, and each such employee shall be paid only such additional compensation or portion thereof as will not cause his aggregate compensation to exceed a rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect as of December 1, 1942, and shall terminate on April 30, 1943, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may prescribe.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator does so, if the Senator from Nevada desires to make a statement regarding the bill, he should proceed to do so at this time.

Mr. BURTON. I am very glad to have the Senator from Nevada discuss the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this matter may be disposed of quite promptly. The same argument which was indulged in with reference to the bill relating to the police and fire departments applies with equal force to the bill relating to pay for teachers.

The lowest pay for teachers in the District of Columbia is $1,400. Because of that low salary, it is impossible to fill the quota for teachers in the District. The increase proposed by the substitute will effect about the same result in the lowest salary brackets for teachers as was effected by the bill adopted by the Senate in regard to policemen. In other words, what the Senate is doing is adding more starvation to those who are already starving. The Senate has just voted a $100 increase to men who are getting only $1,900 and a much larger increase to men who are getting from $2,400 up to $3,600. The same thing applies to the teachers' bill. If the Senate is to be consistent, it might just as well adopt the substitute, and have it over with.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment to express this thought: At the last session of Congress the teachers of the District of Columbia were the one group that were not granted a temporary increase of pay. The substitute provides for them precisely the same increase of pay as was voted for the other Federal employees and the other employees of the District of Columbia. It will last until April 30, 1943, at which time there will have to be a reconsideration of the issue as to them and as to all other Federal employees. I, therefore, urge the adoption of the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senators from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK and Mr. THOMAS] are detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is absent because of illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 34, as follows:

| | | |

So Mr. BURTON's amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide additional compensation for teachers and all other educational employees of the public schools of the District of Columbia whose salaries are fixed in the 'Teachers Salary Act.'"

WAR LOAN DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS—SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT AND RESERVE REQUIREMENTS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 700, proposing to amend the Federal Reserve Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 700) to amend section 12B and section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act during the continuance of the war and for 6 months after its termination, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope Senators will remain in the Chamber. I think the bill sponsored by the Senator from New York need not involve much controversy, but following that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] desires to have a bill considered. Whether we finish these bills this afternoon may determine whether the Senate will have to meet tomorrow or may go over until Thursday. I hope Senators will remain in the Chamber.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I suppose it might be said that the bill now before the Senate is rather technical in its nature, so I propose to make a brief statement, and after completing my statement, of course, I shall be willing to answer any questions which may be propounded, if I am able to answer them.

The measure now before us, Senate bill 700, provides that for the duration of the war and 6 months thereafter so-called war-loan deposit accounts shall be relieved from Federal Deposit Insurance assessments and also from reserve requirements. It was introduced by me at the request of the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Mr. Crowley, and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Eccles. Its enactment is intended to improve the machinery for the Government's war financing. It has also the approval of the Treasury, of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and of the System's open-market committee.

War-loan accounts were originally authorized by the Second Liberty Bond Act of September 24, 1917. The law provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may deposit in such incorporated banks and trust companies as he may designate any proceeds arising from the sale of bonds and certificates of indebtedness, Treasury bills and War Savings certificates authorized by the Liberty Bond Acts. Most of the Government bonds purchased by banks, insurance companies, and other large investors, as well as the Defense and War Savings bonds sold to the public, have been issued under authority of the Second Liberty Bond Act and the various amendments thereto.

Incorporated banks and trust companies may qualify for war-loan accounts by applying to the Treasury through the Federal Reserve banks, and such accounts are secured by a pledge of bonds. The Treasury determines the maximum which may be on deposit in any account at any one time. When banks which have qualified for war-loan accounts subscribe to Government securities for their customers or for themselves, they enter the amount of their allotted subscriptions in the war-loan accounts on the payment dates. The balances in these accounts are subject to call by the Treasury. Subsequently, as the Treasury has need for funds, calls are issued. The calls consist of giving notice to the banks to transfer to their respective Federal Reserve banks whatever percentage of the funds in the war-loan accounts is required by the Treasury to meet its current expenditures. Thus the war-loan accounts are drawn down gradually as Treasury needs arise. The money is then checked out of the Reserve banks by the Treasury in payment of the Government's expenses. As the money is spent by the Government, checks are received by contractors, businessmen, and others who deposit them in the various banks throughout the country. Thus the money previously withdrawn from the banks flows back into the banking system as privately owned deposits.

The Federal Reserve banks act as the Government's fiscal agents, and all payments made by the Treasury are charged against its accounts in the Federal Reserve banks. As a matter of Treasury policy, the balances in these accounts are kept down as much as possible. They just keep feeding those accounts into the Federal Reserve banks as the Treasury needs the money, so that the maximum amount of funds is kept within the private banking system.

If there were no such mechanism—that is, if all banks upon subscribing to Government securities for their customers or themselves were required to transfer the funds in payment of their subscriptions immediately to the Federal Reserve banks—there would be periodic, heavy drains on the deposit totals and reserves of the banking system, with serious disruptive effects on the Government bond market. The larger the financing operation, the greater and more disruptive the drain would be. In peacetime, when the Government was not compelled to raise and expend such huge sums as are demanded by war and when the banks had superabundant reserves, the situation, of course, was very different. But today when the Treasury must go to the public and to the money market for large sums of money every few months, and when reserve requirements are repeatedly increased as bank deposits increase, it is very important to extend the war loan deposit mechanism as wisely as possible throughout the banking system.

If there were no such mechanism, it would be necessary to pump billions of reserves into the banking system to offset the heavy drains at financing periods, and as the funds were spent by the Government and flowed back into the banks as deposits, the reserves which had been pumped in would become excessive in relation to the current need.

Any such scarcity and redundancy of reserve funds would create difficult problems for the Treasury and the Reserve System. To the extent that the war-loan account mechanism exists throughout the banking system such difficulties can be avoided, and the flow of deposit reserves into the war-loan accounts, then to the Federal Reserve banks as the Treasury needs and calls for the money, then back into the banking system as the Treasury expends the money, is accomplished smoothly and without disruptive effects. There is a close adjustment and a minimum time lag between the drawing down of the money and its flow back into the deposit structure.

Because of this consideration, the Reserve System has made a special effort and a concerted drive, through all of the Reserve banks, to induce as many banks as possible to apply and qualify for war-loan deposit accounts. The results so far have been gratifying, and a large number of banks, fifty-six hundred, have applied and qualified for these accounts, even though they may have felt that the war-loan accounts should not be subject to deposit-insurance assessments or to reserve requirements. There are still many thousands of banks which have not as yet used war-loan accounts, and it is clear that the requirements of existing law, which the pending bill would suspend for the duration, are a deterrent in many instances. Not only is a more widespread setting up of this convenient and necessary mechanism thus impeded, but banks that have war-loan accounts are discouraged from utilizing them as fully as would be the case if these statutory requirements were suspended. Neither requirement existed when war-loan accounts were originally authorized by Congress in the last war. We had no deposit insurance at that time, and war-loan accounts were not subject to reserves before the year 1935. If this measure is enacted I feel sure that the mechanism will be widely set up and generally utilized to facilitate the large financing operations which are ahead of us as long as the heavy requirements of the war situation continues.

The time element of the enactment is important. If we have large financing operations in April, which is now in contemplation, the problem of financing will be greatly increased unless this bill is enacted in the meantime and we are successful in increasing and expanding war-loan accounts. Prompt passage of this measure is urged in order that the Treasury and the banks may have time to complete the necessary arrangements for the banks to act as war-loan account depositories before the next financing takes place.

At present the War Loan Deposit Account is a demand deposit and the Federal Reserve member banks must carry reserves against these deposits. Central reserve city and reserve city banks must carry a reserve of 20 percent and country banks a reserve of 14 percent. All member banks carry a reserve of 6 percent against time deposits. The statutory requirements were 3 percent on time deposits and 13 percent on demand deposits of central reserve city banks, 10 percent on demand deposits of reserve city banks and 7 percent on demand deposits of country banks. The Federal Reserve Board had power to double all reserve requirements and it did so, so that country banks now carry 14 percent and reserve city banks 20 percent against demand deposits. Last fall, because of war financing, requirements for central reserve city banks were reduced from 26 to 20 percent, which is the same percentage required for reserve city banks on demand deposits.

Mr. President, that concludes my statement. Unless Senators desire to ask questions about the bill, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Apparently the enactment of the bill will, to some degree, reduce the premium income of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator tell me to what extent that will happen?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not have the figures before me. Mr. Crowley, however, was not disturbed about it. He appeared before our committee. I think Mr. Crowley stated at the time that the elimination of the assessment requirement would perhaps affect the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to the extent of about two and one-half million dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So I understand that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation approves the measure?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the Senator explained section 2 of the bill?

Mr. WAGNER. With reference to the reserve?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I did. I hope I did.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the effect, in a word, of section 2? Is it to suspend reserves on war bond deposits?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes, only on war bond deposits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the word "That", it is proposed to strike out "during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after its termination," and insert in lieu thereof, "until 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New York a question. The bill addresses itself to the insurance of bank deposits?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would the Senator kindly state what his conception is as to the spirit and the intent of the law passed by the Congress for the insurance of bank deposits? Was it for the benefit of insuring banking corporations, or was it for the benefit of the people?

Mr. WAGNER. For the benefit of the people, of course.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. That leads me to another question which comes to my mind due to a condition which has arisen under my own observation in my own State. Mr. Crowley has arbitrarily said that the people of a particular community in my State cannot have the benefit of the bank deposit-insurance law because—and what is to follow is my own interpretation—because, I take it, that Mr. Crowley does not like the Bank of America. I do not know whether or not my conclusion is correct, but I believe it be well founded based on the acts of Mr. Crowley. The people of my State, and the people of the State of New York, and the people of every other State are entitled to have their deposits insured, and when they set up a banking institution under the laws of their State they should know that they can have the benefits of the law enacted by the Congress. Mr. Crowley, who by the way, as I understand, is not even under salary from the Government, but is highly salaried by a private institution, says the people of my State cannot have the benefits or the rights under that law. Does that conform with the ideas of the able Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know enough about the facts to decide that particular question, but when we had hearings upon the measure which is now before the Senate the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], a member of the committee, made inquiry of Mr. Crowley with reference to this very situation, and Mr. Crowley said that he had ample justification for what the Corporation did with relation to the one bank, one branch of which, I think, is located in Boulder City and another somewhere else in the State of Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. One at Las Vegas and the other at Boulder City.

Mr. WAGNER. He said he was quite willing at any time to discuss the matter with the committee or with anyone who was interested. I read from the hearings:

Mr. CROWLEY. Well, I presume you are talking about Las Vegas and Boulder City.

Senator SCRUGHAM. Yes; and the branch at Boulder City.

Mr. CROWLEY. Well, from my understanding, our record shows in connection with that bank that all except qualifying shares are not owned locally, and that the qualifying shares that the directors have are under option by a holding company, to be purchased from them at their option at a fixed purchase price.

Senator SCRUGHAM. I understand the outstanding shares are optioned.

Mr. CROWLEY. That is a subject, gentlemen, that would take a long, long time to explore, and we do not like to have that brought up in connection with this bill.

I am sure that our Corporation, our associates, in the Federal supervisory and the regulatory fields would welcome an opportunity, if the Senate Banking and Currency Committee so wished, to be given a reasonable length of time to submit our reasons for the stand we have all taken on the expansion of holding-company banks throughout the west coast.

I think, Senator, as far as your situation is concerned, that if those people will buy the controlling interest in that bank, which they have indicated a willingness to do, that we would be very happy to insure it. I hate to have that tied onto this bill, but I want you to know, Senator, that we would be very happy to sit down and discuss this matter with you.

I think that has to do with the matter which the Senator from Nevada has in mind.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I go back again to the first principle, and my question about it which the able Senator from New York answered correctly. Did we enact the law for the insurance of deposits for the welfare of Mr. Crowley, or to suit his whims or his caprices, or did we enact that law for the welfare of the people?

Mr. WAGNER. For the welfare of the people. Of course Mr. Crowley must follow and obey the law.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. But he is not following it. He is not following the spirit of the law. Here is a group of people who are supporting a bank in their community. It is the only bank in the community of Boulder City. Boulder City has been created by the Federal Government. It is a Federal city. It is supported entirely by Federal employees. It is located at Boulder Dam. The people there want to support their bank. They want to deposit their money in that bank. But Mr. Crowley says, "No, we will not give you any guarantee insurance whatsoever. You can deposit your money there at your own risk if you want to." He made the same statement with reference to the bank at Las Vegas, which is one of the largest cities in the State of Nevada. The people of Las Vegas want to deposit their money in the Las Vegas bank, that is the Nevada State Bank. Mr. Crowley says, "Yes; you can deposit your money there if you want to, but you cannot have any insurance. We will not guarantee you."

I ask the question: Was the law enacted to suit the caprice of Mr. Crowley, who is not even retained by the Federal Government, but is retained by a private concern?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, that statement does not relate to this particular proposed legislation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not sure that it does not. It seems to me it does. The status of Mr. Crowley in this whole setup is very important. Is he serving the Federal Government or is he serving a private concern? Is he serving the Federal Government in the spirit of the law, or is he serving some private concern in the letter of the law? It seems to me that is very important, and it certainly will control my vote on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the subject about which the Senator from Nevada is inquiring has no direct relationship to the proposed legislation, although it does affect the insurance of deposits.

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is not simply a matter of Mr. Crowley's whim.

Mr. McCARRAN. No; but what I refer to is apparently a matter of Mr. Crowley's whim.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, what I started to say was that the position taken by Mr. Crowley as the head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is a position which is adhered to and endorsed by all those who are connected with the Federal Deposit Insurance setup, including the supervisory agencies, and the Securities and Exchange Commission, which has no direct connection with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, but which, of course, does have an interest in the regulation of matters of this sort.

While it is true, as we all recognize, that this law was passed for the benefit of depositors, nevertheless there are certain regulations and qualifications which must be met by banks in order that they may come under the system. There are regulations of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which have barred some banks from being insured, merely because they failed to comply with those regulations.

I do not know all the details relating to the two banks referred to, but I understand that they are not locally owned. As I understand, some of the shares of those banks which are held by the directors are optioned to be sold to someone else.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator tell me what difference that would make to the depositors?

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps it would not make any difference, but that is one of the regulations of the F. D. I. C.

Mr. McCARRAN. That brings us back to the same question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not possess all the facts. All I know is what Mr. Crowley said in answer to the question of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] at the time the bill was before the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. I make the assertion, without fear of successful contradiction, that Mr. Crowley exercises his authority in conformity with his likes and dislikes. He has formed a dislike for a certain banking institution which has many branches located in the West. He does not propose to allow that institution to give to the people of my State the rights which the law gives them, and which the spirit of the law intended to give them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator refer to the institution controlled by Mr. Giannini? That is the Bank of America, is it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. It is the Bank of America.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is known everywhere as the Giannini Bank.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator say that no bank in that group has been insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Mr. McCARRAN. If any banks are to be insured, why not the banks of Nevada?

Mr. BARKLEY. Each bank, of course, must stand on its own bottom.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well, but that objection has not been raised with respect to the banks in Nevada. They are simply told, "You cannot have insurance."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this matter was before the committee when the committee considered the proposed legislation. Strictly speaking, it has nothing to do with the pending legislation. However, at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Nevada, our committee agreed that at another time we would hear Mr. Crowley with regard to the situation mentioned, and that satisfied the junior Senator from Nevada at the time.

Mr. McCARRAN. It does not satisfy the senior Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know what more we can do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the instance of the Nevada banks, Mr. Crowley may be guilty of everything which the able senior Senator from Nevada has said, but I do not wish to allow the Senator's indictment to stand as a generality, because I have had a great deal to do with Mr. Crowley in connection with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. If I ever saw an intelligent administration of a public trust, if I ever saw an earnest, enlightened effort to deal with the subject to the best possible advantage to the Nation, I have seen it in connection with what has been done under Mr. Crowley in every instance which has come to my attention.

Frequently there have been violent disputes as a result of the application of decisions of the F. D. I. C. to some given state of facts. However, so far as the general attitude is concerned, as reflected in the public service of Mr. Crowley, in this particular assignment—again declining to apply what I have said to the Nevada situation, because I know nothing about it—I assert from a very close connection with Mr. Crowley's public service that I think he is one of the ablest, fairest, and best administrators I have seen in my 15 years of public service.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with everything which the distinguished Senator from Michigan has said.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I wish to endorse everything the senior Senator from Michigan has just stated in regard to Mr. Crowley.

I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that when the pending bill was under consideration by the Committee on Banking and Currency Mr. Crowley appeared before the committee and testified. Mr. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, also appeared and testified. The matter was gone into very carefully, and no opposition developed to the bill at the time. The committee acted favorably upon it by unanimous vote.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of what has been said about the F. D. I. C., I should like to quote some figures relating to what has occurred since the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation came into existence. Incidentally, the permanent plan of insurance became effective August 23, 1935. The Senator from Kentucky knows something about its history.

The total income of the F. D. I. C. from 1934 to 1942 was $406,000,000.

The assessments paid in by banks were $319,000,000.

The income from investments was $87,000,000.

The total expenses paid and losses charged off by the F. D. I. C. were $80,000,000.

The total insurance loss and expense was $50,000,000.

The total administrative expense was $30,000,000.

The surplus of the F. D. I. C. on December 31, 1942, was $326,000,000.

The capital of the F. D. I. C. on December 31, 1942, was $289,000,000.

The capital paid in by the Treasury on December 31, 1942, was $150,000,000.

The capital paid in by the Federal Reserve banks, equal to one-half of the Federal Reserve banks' surplus, on January 1, 1933, was $139,000,000.

I know of no institution with a record which equals or surpasses the record made by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this question is of vital importance to the State of Nevada. I do not propose to let it pass unnoticed, because it has been the subject of correspondence with Mr. Crowley, who has passed it off lightly with a wave of his hand, saying that he would take care of it. However, he never did take care of it. I know that Mr. Crowley is intent upon not giving to the people of my State what the spirit of the law intends they shall have. I do not believe that the bill should pass at this late hour in the afternoon without a thorough understanding of it. In my files, but not available at this hour, I have correspondence bearing upon the subject which I think the Senate should know about.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over until tomorrow so that we may discuss the whole matter at length and in the spirit of the law. I hope the Senator from New York will be agreeable to that suggestion, so that we may discuss the matter more thoroughly. I will say frankly to the Senator from New York that I did not know until a moment ago what the purport of the bill was. I did not know how intimately it affected my State. I did not know that it was a matter so closely touching the banks of my State.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know what the Senator means by affecting the banks of his State. We now have 14,307 commercial banks and trust companies. The number of insured commercial banks and trust companies is 13,347. I assure the able Senator from Nevada that the banking situation in his State will be gone into thoroughly by the Committee on Banking and Currency. The committee so decided at its last meeting, and the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] who is not now present in the Chamber, seemed perfectly satisfied.

The pending bill is rather important from the standpoint of War bonds which the Government is attempting to sell. We hope to expand the opportunities of sale. We want to bring in banks which, because of the assessment involved, did not feel willing to participate in the purchase of War bonds. Every day lost is a serious thing for the country.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it so serious that the interest of the people of a sovereign State should be set aside and forgotten?

Mr. WAGNER. That question does not relate to the pending bill at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Oh, indeed it does.

Mr. WAGNER. No; it has no relation whatever to it. The bill deals with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and relieves certain banks from assessments because of War-bond deposits. That affects the bank at Boulder City to which reference has been made. There is nothing in the bill which would affect that bank specifically.

Mr. McCARRAN. The whole spirit of the application of the law is involved in the pending bill. When I bring to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency a situation which is being ignored by Mr. Crowley in order to satisfy his own dislike for some particular banking institution, I think it is time for the Senate to wake up to the question involved.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. All the pending bill would do would be to relieve certain deposits in insured banks from the tax which goes into the fund to pay off losses. We cannot provide by law that certain banks in Nevada shall be insured. They are not paying any taxes into the fund, and until they are insured they will not pay any taxes. So the pending bill could not possibly affect them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Why are they not paying into the fund, and why are they not insured?

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume the reason is that the banks have not met the requirements of the regulations. I have no reason to assume otherwise. I agree with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in what he has said about Mr. Crowley. The Board of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation does not consist merely of Mr. Crowley. Mr. Crowley is the head of the board. I think the F. D. I. C. has done a magnificent job in insuring banks and in inspiring confidence on the part of the people in the safety of deposits in our banks, both National and State. If several banks which may be branch banks or subsidiary banks of a bank located in another State have not come within the regulations of the Board, and therefore are not insured, and are paying no taxes into the fund, I say frankly that I do not see what that has to do with the pending bill. All the bill seeks to do is to remove the necessity of payment of taxes on some of the deposits which are insured. The bill would not affect at all the deposits which are not insured. I hope the Senator will not insist that the bill go over in order that he may discuss that subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall insist that the bill go over, because I think I would be doing an injustice to the people of my State were I not so to insist. Something must be done so that the people of any State, regardless of its size—it may be a State of small population—shall have the benefit of the rights granted by law. If Mr. Crowley is going to set himself up as a czar in this matter and is going to deny the people of my State the rights the law intends them to have, I intend to find out about it. I did not know about the hearings. If I had known about them I should have appeared before the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure that the Senator has an erroneous impression about the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no erroneous impression about Mr. Crowley, nor do I have an erroneous impression regarding the fact that he is not a Federal employee, but is being retained and employed by private concerns. I am not in error on that point.

Mr. WAGNER. The Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board are equally greatly interested in the bill because of what would be done under its terms. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is now receiving less money than it would receive if the measure became law.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. WAGNER. If the bill were enacted into law, all banks whose deposits are insured would be eliminated from the necessity of paying the assessment tax. All banks, including the banks in the Senator's State, would be relieved from that necessity.

Mr. McCARRAN. But I want deposits in the banks of my State insured.

Mr. WAGNER. The pending bill does not relate at all to the question of insuring bank deposits.

Mr. McCARRAN. But I want them brought under its terms so they will be insured.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill has nothing to do with that question. All the pending bill would do would be to provide that, so far as war-loan deposits were concerned, the insured banks would not be required to pay into the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation the one-twelfth of 1 percent assessment. The bill has no relation at all to the subject matter about which the Senator is disturbed. The junior Senator from Nevada himself immediately realized that to be so, and said: "It is true that it has nothing to do with that situation; so we shall defer until another time."

I agreed, and the committee agreed, that we would hear Mr. Crowley on the very situation to which the Senator refers. The committee could not be fairer than that; because there is nothing in the pending bill which would in any way affect the situation about which the Senator has been speaking.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know that the Senator believes he is correct in that statement.

Mr. WAGNER. In what respect does the Senator believe I am mistaken?

Mr. McCARRAN. But I should like to have an opportunity to know what the hearings were, at least. Let me say that the Senator is not to blame for the fact that I am bringing up the matter, because I did not know until just now that the bill was to be considered today.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill does not in any way or in any respect refer to the situation about which the Senator is complaining. That is why I appeal to him not to cause delay in acting on this measure, which is very important, because we shall soon have another war-loan drive.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will it be between now and Thursday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the Senator that if we do not dispose of the bill today, I shall move that the Senate meet tomorrow.

Mr. McCARRAN. That will be all right.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was hoping that the Senate might dispose of the pending bill and of one or two other bills today, and not meet tomorrow. But if the measure must go over to a subsequent day, I shall ask for a session tomorrow.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to point out two things which may have a bearing on the points raised by the Senator from Nevada. Regardless of whether they do have pertinency at this moment, they should be considered in connection with any further discussion of the matter.

In the first place, Mr. Crowley said—and I read from page 16 of the hearings:

This—

Meaning the Nevada bank situation—has been kind of a thorn in our sides for a long, long time, and we feel quite definite about it, since all of the supervisory forces and the Securities and Exchange Commission are in accord, and if this committee has any requests, we would be glad to prepare our testimony and our charts and show you why we have taken the stand we have taken on that matter.

Then I turn to one further factor, which is subsection "g" of the Federal Reserve Act compilation. I read from page 54:

The factors to be enumerated in the certificate required under subsection (e)—

Which deals with the requisites to be considered in insuring banks—and to be considered by the Board of Directors under subsection (f) shall be the following: The financial history and condition of the bank, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earning prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served by the bank, and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this section.

Let me also remark that any bank seeking to be insured must elect and file notice of election and willingness to be bound by the regulations of the F. D. I. C., which of course are issued pursuant to the warrant of the law.

Therefore, I respectfully suggest that in one or more particulars Mr. Crowley intimates that the banks mentioned by the Senator from Nevada have failed to qualify. One of the points he certainly stressed was that the stock ownership of the Nevada banks was optioned, that only a few qualifying shares were owned locally, that all the remaining capital structure—insofar as the corporate shares represented evidence of ownership—were apparently outside the control of the banking system of the State of Nevada.

Please understand that I am deducting much of the foregoing from the testimony submitted by Mr. Crowley. I do not know that it controls; but I do say that there are factors between the F. D. I. C., created by law, and the applying banks which very properly may militate against their being eligible for insurance at all.

But regardless of whether there are any such factors, I respectfully suggest to the Senator from Nevada that the matter very properly should be gone into by the Committee on Banking and Currency. Mr. Crowley has said he is willing to have the committee do so. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], has said he is willing to have the committee take such action, and speaking as a minority member of the committee, I am quite willing that it be done.

So I respectfully add that in any case, regardless of whether the banks are insured, the matter certainly does not bear on the question of whether we take out of an assessment base the balances created by the United States Government for its convenience in serving as a possible attraction to banks all over the country to participate in our war financing efforts. After everything is said and done, that is all the bill is intended to accomplish.

Therefore, to the extent that the bill will aid in the war effort, it is an essential and necessary measure, and in no way relates to whether banks in Las Vegas or Boulder City are eligible for insurance.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I was about to make a suggestion. If possible, I desire to satisfy the Senator from Nevada; because he is entitled to a hearing on the matter. If the Senator will select any time satisfactory to him, I will call a meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee, so that the whole matter may be threshed out. I shall be glad to have the Senator select any time he prefers.

As has been so ably stated, the bill in no way relates to the grievance which the Senator from Nevada has in mind; and even if we were to postpone passage of the bill, the Senator would find in the end that there is nothing in the measure which would affect the situation he has in mind. I am quite willing now, if the Senator from Nevada will agree, to arrange to have the committee meet on next Tuesday, a week from tomorrow. If that time is satisfactory to the Senator, the Committee on Banking and Currency will meet then, and we shall have Mr. Crowley before us, and the Senator from Nevada and his colleague will be there, and the matter will be discussed before the full committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, I am not sufficiently in touch with the situation to be able to select a particular date.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to extend every courtesy of the committee—

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is always courteous.

Mr. WAGNER. But I realize the danger of delaying the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would there be any gross danger in delaying the matter until the next session of the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. In the conduct of the war, every day counts. We are anxious to have a very large subscription, and we want to add to the number of banks which we are sure will utilize these facilities if we eliminate the assessment provision.

Mr. McCARRAN. I respectfully suggest that no great harm can result from having the matter go over to the next legislative day. Whether that be tomorrow or Thursday, I have no right to designate.

Mr. WAGNER. I respectfully suggest that every day counts.

Mr. McCARRAN. Every day counts to my people, too.

Mr. WAGNER. It is not particularly Mr. Crowley who is concerned about the situation.

Mr. McCARRAN. But it is Mr. Crowley who is dominating the situation, and Mr. Crowley's likes and dislikes are entering into the situation.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am afraid the Senator has not been sufficiently advised.

Mr. WAGNER. I am advised with reference to the pending bill. The request has come from the Treasury, which is concerned with obtaining a large subscription.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall respectfully ask that the bill go over until the next legislative day. Whether that be tomorrow or Thursday, I have no right of designation. But I should like to go into the subject. I say frankly to the Senator from New York that until this moment I had no idea that a bill of this nature was coming before the Senate. Had I known it was before the Senator's committee, I should have been there.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's colleague is a member of the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he took particular pains to inquire of Mr. Crowley about the particular situation to which reference has been made. Let me ask the Senator from Nevada whether, if the bill shall go over to the next legislative session, which will be tomorrow if we cannot dispose of it today, he will be satisfied with disposing of it tomorrow. He could discuss the matter he wants taken care of, I suppose. There is no amendment which could be offered, and no legislation which could be enacted, which would affect the situation in which he is interested.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill is susceptible of amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot decide in the Senate whether the banks to which the Senator has refered should be insured.

Mr. McCARRAN. No, indeed; not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I myself have no objection to the bill going over until tomorrow, but I should not want to have it go over until Thursday.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well; I shall be satisfied with anything that will give us time enough to look into the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is about 5 o'clock, and I suppose the bill might as well go over until tomorrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I wish to move to have a bill on the calendar considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside so that he can ask that another bill be considered, if the Senator thinks the bill can be disposed of this afternoon, so that it would not interfere with the pending bill tomorrow.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that there are two bills which I wish to have considered, which, so far as I am informed, are not controversial, though there are a number interested in them. I have no way of knowing how long consideration of the bills will take, but I do not suppose it will take long. They were reported from the committee unanimously. One or two amendments have been offered to one of the bills since it was reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is rather doubtful whether at this hour a new bill should be taken up if it involves controversial questions. I do not know whether the Senator's bills are controversial. The Senate will meet tomorrow, and I wonder whether the Senator would be discommoded in any way if the bills went over until tomorrow.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. That would be entirely agreeable.

TRANSFERS AND REDUCTIONS OF PERSONNEL IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider Senate Resolution 84. It merely makes a request for information from the Civil Service Commission. I cannot imagine there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and the pending bill is temporarily laid aside. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) submitted by Mr. BYRD on January 21, 1943, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Civil Service Commission is requested to prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Senate detailed monthly reports for the month of January 1943 and each month thereafter up to and including April 1943 with respect to (1) the number of employees of the various executive departments and agencies released or transferred to other departments and agencies pursuant to section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution extending until April 30, 1943, the period for which overtime rates of compensation may be paid under the acts of June 28, 1940 (54 Stat. 676), October 21, 1940 (54 Stat. 1205), and June 3, 1941 (55 Stat. 241), and for other purposes," approved December 24, 1942; (2) the number of vacancies which have been allowed to remain unfilled subsequent to the date of enactment of such joint resolution; (3) the savings in salaries resulting from such reductions in personnel; and (4) the instances in which such reductions were made possible by the adoption of a 48-hour workweek.

SIZE OF THE ARMY

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, Thursday last I introduced Senate bill 763, to amend the Selective Service Act by exempting married men with children. Some criticism has been made of the proposal, on the ground that it would tend to limit the size of the Army, and also that no civilian should have anything to say about the size of the Army.

I call attention to an editorial in the New York Times of February 26. Certainly the New York Times could not be called an isolationist newspaper, because it consistently supported the administrations' foreign policy, both before and after Pearl Harbor.

The editorial from the New York Times reads as follows:

SIZE OF THE ARMY

It is the administration's decision that we need an army of 8,200,000 by the end of this year. The Navy, the marines, and the Coast Guard are planning for 2,600,000. This would make a total just short of 11,000,000 men planned for our armed forces by the end of 1943.

Spokesmen for the Army imply that this decision is irrevocable. Many of them cannot understand why the decision should be even questioned. They seem to assume that those who do question it want to fight a soft war and not a hard one. They imply also that the decision made by the Army is an expert decision, and that any questioning of it must necessarily be inexpert.

But the questions nonetheless continue. They increase rather than diminish. The fact that the War Department itself has just been forced to consider the question of assigning troops to help pick cotton is simply one more indication that the questioning has not been baseless.

It is not for laymen to decide what the size of the armed forces should be. But the country must be satisfied—and it has not yet been satisfied—that the question has been decided on the right principles and by the right method. Advocates of an 8,000,000-man army have put forward, as if they were conclusive, arguments which are not in fact conclusive. We are told, for example, that the Axis commands an estimated land strength of 510 to 605 divisions; that the United Nations can muster only an estimated 395 to 505 divisions against them; and that therefore we must have so-and-so many divisions to turn the balance. We are told that 13½ percent of the German population is in the armed forces, and that we must therefore put a similar percentage into our armed forces.

These figures involve a considerable element of guesswork. We do not, in fact, know precisely how many fully trained and equipped divisions the Axis today can muster. We do not even know how many fully trained and equipped divisions our Russian ally now commands. But regardless of the accuracy of these figures, they are being put forward with an implication that must be questioned. This is the implication that a nation's total effectiveness in war is measured primarily if not wholly by the number of men it can put into uniform. This is clearly not true. The number of a nation's army divisions symbolizes its total effectiveness in war only on the assumption that its war effort is a balanced one. If we have less than the largest possible number of men in the armed forces under a balanced war effort, then we are falling below the standard demanded by total war. But if we have more than this number in the armed forces, they are there only at the cost of other aspects of an essential war program.

It does not follow, for example, that an American Army of 10,000,000 would necessarily be twice as effective in winning the war as an army of 5,000,000. It could, in fact, be considerably less effective. The real question is one of a proper internal balance. Raw materials and manpower are limited; whatever is used in one direction cannot be used in another. The steel and man-hours that go into tanks mean just that much less for merchant ships, and vice versa. The men that go into the Army mean just that many men fewer for the production of food, clothing, mechanized equipment for the Army, or the production of transport ships and escort vessels to carry the Army. Every man added to the armed forces, in short, not only means one man more to supply; it also means one man less to supply him.

It is from this point of view that the problem must be considered. When we so consider it, it is clearly fallacious to assume that our effort can be compared with the German effort simply by comparing the number of men each nation puts into a standing army. If we are to land troops on or near the European Continent and to keep them properly supplied, our war effort becomes necessarily different from the German war effort. A far greater percentage of our strength must necessarily go not merely into manning and building a Navy, but into manning and building troop transports, freighters, and tankers. These become our lifeline. Upon the maintenance of that lifeline the whole effectiveness of our Army depends.

But to create and maintain this lifeline requires thousands of merchant seamen, who at present are not counted as members of our armed forces, though they play a role no less vital. It requires thousands of shipbuilders to turn out this merchant fleet. It requires, behind these, the workers in the steel mills, in the iron mines, the workers on a hundred accessories of all sorts that go into ships. Behind these, in turn, are the farmers. And as Louis Bromfield remarked in a recent letter to this newspaper, "Without food, all the ships and planes and tanks and soldiers are worthless." None of the workers on ships, in factories, on the farm, is in uniform; but all are as vital in our total war effort as the men who are in uniform.

When we take this over-all view, we can see why it is that the Army leaders alone are not qualified to be the sole and final judges of the size of the armed forces. It is not enough for the generals to say that we need so many men, or for the admirals to say that we need so many ships. Obviously, other things in proportion, an army of 16,000,000 men would be twice as effective as an army of 8,000,000. Other things equal, 400 new destroyers would be twice as effective as 200 new destroyers. And so on. But other things never can be equal. If we make our Army larger, we must make some other part of our war effort smaller. This applies to any part of our war effort whatever.

That is why in total war the problem of the size of the armed forces is one that can be worked out only by the joint study and consultation of military, economic, agricultural, and industrial experts. The question involved is not at all what the total size of our war effort ought to be. This ought obviously to be as great as we can possibly make it. The real question concerns the internal balance of our war effort. Even before we have begun to realize the ultimate goal of induction set by the armed forces, there is already admitted to be on all sides a serious labor shortage. What intelligent and responsible questioners of the plans for ultimate armed forces of 11,000,000 are asking is whether the proper food authorities, farm authorities and specialists in many other lines were consulted, and whether proper weight was given to their opinion, before the Army figures were arrived at.

Total war is a military problem. But it is much more. It is a problem of a nation's total economy. And experts on that economy must be consulted on every major decision no less than purely military experts.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that statements have been made before the Committee on Military Affairs to the effect that if we are to have an army of 11,000,000 men we will take four-fifths of the able-bodied men of this country between the ages of 18 and 38. That would mean that we would take four-fifths of the married men of the country between 18 and 38 with children.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to remind the Senator that replacements, normal replacements and replacements made necessary by battle casualties, would probably take the other fifth in a little over a year, which would mean that the present plan is to take all the able-bodied men between 18 and 38.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that was substantially the testimony which came out before the committee. So that it would mean that practically all the physically fit men between 18 and 38 would be taken into the armed forces.

Mr. President, when certain officers appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I questioned them on the point of why they exempted physically fit single men between the ages of 38 and 45. The answer was that the greater percentage of the men between those ages could not stand up as well under war conditions as the younger men. It should be remembered, however, that when they are considering men between the ages of 38 and 45 they are considering them from the standpoint of combat service. It is well known that there will be perhaps more than a million and a half men, probably many more than that, who will not be used in actual combat service but who will be used in other than combat service. I cannot understand why Army officials wish to exempt physically fit single men between the ages of 38 and 45, and take all the physically fit married men between the ages of 18 and 38, who have children. If that is done it will result in breaking down completely American home life. The wife in such a family will, in order to make a living—unless she can live with her folks or has money of her own—place her children in an institution, at least during the daytime, while she goes to work to support them. The very rock upon which the Government is founded is the American home. The very foundation of democracy in this country is the American home. While the men are fighting for democracy in some other country it is proposed to destroy the American home by taking from it the head of the family, the father whom the children need for advice and counsel just as much as they need their mother.

Mr. President, I shall never be able to subscribe to any policy of that kind. Let me say that if such a policy is to be followed, then, much as I am opposed to the measure proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and by Representative WADSWORTH, I feel that we shall have to do what they propose in their bill. It will be necessary to turn over to the Federal bureaucrats in Washington the right to say where every farmer, where every merchant, where every laboring man, and where everyone else shall work, in what particular place, and as Mr. Baruch is quoted as saying in this afternoon's newspaper, that means slavery.

Mr. President, last summer I was talking with a group of farmers in my State. One farmer said to me "Why do you not conscript labor?" I said to him "You are a farmer, are you not?" He answered "Yes." I said to him, "How would you like to have some bureaucrat in Washington to say to you, 'You are on a piece of land which is not very fertile. You are living upon what is less than an economic unit from an agricultural standpoint, and we are going to take you from it, remove you from your home, and make you work for someone who has a much better and larger farm'? How would you like to have some bureaucrat say to the corner groceryman 'We are going to take you by the scruff of the neck, remove you from your store, and make you work for the A. & P., because your store does not comprise an economic unit'?"

Mr. President, what would such action mean? It would mean that in this country we would have the very thing against which we are fighting—there would be a dictatorship, a Fascist government.

Before the Congress of the United States decides upon a program such as has been outlined, I believe we had better stop and think not only of its immediate effect but we had better ascertain where we in the United States are drifting. We had better be sure where this course is going to take us. We want to be sure whether it is necessary to go to the extent of destroying the American home in order to carry on a successful war.

Mr. President, someone has said, "Of course, the American people are willing to make any sacrifice which is necessary in order to preserve democracy." I agree with that statement. In order to save democracy in the United States, every man, woman, and child, regardless of age, marital relations, or economic conditions, would be perfectly willing to make any sacrifice necessary. But we are not simply called upon to support an American Army. We are called upon to send Russia a tremendous amount of food and ammunition. It has been testified that 1,500,000 tires were sent to Russia alone last year. We are sending food to north Africa to civilians and to the Army alike. We have to send food to England. We have to send equipment to South America. We have to send equipment to India, to Australia, to China, and practically all over the world. To begin with, we said we were going to be the arsenal of the democracies of the world. Is it possible for us, without destroying democratic institutions in the United States of America, to be the arsenal of the world, to be suppliers of food for the rest of the world, and at the same time furnish the men to fight in the four corners of the world? That is the problem as I see it.

Mr. President, while I am as anxious to win the war as is any other Member on the floor of the Senate, or anyone in the Government, whether he is a bureaucrat or in any other position, first of all I want to see constitutional government and democracy preserved in the United States; I do not want to lose it while we are fighting for a utopia and for a quart of milk for every child throughout the world.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Kildroy P. Aldrich, of Illinois, to be First Assistant Postmaster General, Post Office Department, vice Ambrose O'Connell; and sundry postmasters.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The following-named captains to be rear admirals in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Ernest L. Gunther, August 11, 1942; and

Spencer S. Lewis, August 15, 1942.

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The following-named officers for appointment in the Regular Army, under the provisions of section 23 and section 24e of the National Defense Act, as amended:

To be first lieutenants, Medical Corps, with rank from date of appointment

First Lt. Albert Junior Bauer, Medical Corps Reserve;

First Lt. John Barry Brady, Medical Corps Reserve;

First Lt. Arthur Abbitt Kirk, Medical Corps Reserve; and

Sundry officers for promotion and/or appointment, by transfer, all in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

AMERICAN-MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edgar E. Witt, of Texas, to be a member of the American-Mexican Claims Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Samuel Marshall Gold, of New York, to be a member of the American-Mexican Claims Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles F. McLaughlin, of Nebraska, to be a member of the American-Mexican Claims Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Michael W. Straus, of Illinois, to be First Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

ALASKA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward L. Bartlett to be Secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the postmaster nominations are confirmed en bloc.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with nearly all the members present, unanimously voted to report favorably the nomination of Kildroy P. Aldrich, of Illinois, to be First Assistant Postmaster General. It is very desirable to have the nomination confirmed as soon as possible. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination may be confirmed now, though it is not on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Kildroy P. Aldrich, of Illinois, to be First Assistant Postmaster General, Post Office Department, vice Ambrose O'Connell.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has the nomination been reported from the committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. It was approved by all the members present. I think nearly all the members of the committee were present. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] moved that the nomination be favorably reported, and it was unanimously reported by the members present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Navy nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for appointment and promotion in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the Marine Corps nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Marine Corps nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of all confirmations of today.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 2, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 1, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art not far away, we pray for the emancipation of everything which holds us down as our ageless petition rises: "What shall I do to be saved?" When things are working adversely, give us the capacity to discern the essential meaning of life. Oh, for the upward gaze of faith and the onward glance of hope.

When parents of the broken circle come to the brow of the hill and stand on the verge of their great sorrow sighing for those who are tossing in the storm of battle, oh, be with them a blessed ministry. When the crisis comes, may they be as cloistered saints finding the path of a heavenly peace. With souls undisturbed by the memories of other days when young hearts knew the joy and prospect of home and that love which carried them from sun to sun, dear Lord, let them find Thee waiting beyond the horizon of their grief. Oh, lead them over deserts dread and gird their armor with fresh courage; soothe and touch their wounded hearts as they suffer through the strain. Before their longing eyes unveil the cross of Him on whose brow there never rested the cloud of an unpromising day. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 26, 1943, was read and approved.

PRACTICE AIR RAID

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to have a statement read by the Clerk which he thinks will be of interest to every Member of the House. We have not had a practice air-raid evacuation of this end of the Capitol yet. The Chair, after consultation with both the majority and minority leaders, feels that this should be done at an early date, and will ask the Clerk to read the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Chair desires to announce that there will be a practice air raid tomorrow between 2 and 4 o'clock, and the House and all persons on the House side of the Capitol will participate.

The guests in the galleries will leave the Chamber by way of the steps on the east and west side of the galleries and proceed to the first floor, where they will leave by the south or east doors as directed by the air-raid assistants.

All Members will leave by the east door or through the hall leading to the Chamber. Those leaving by the east door will proceed straight through to the east front of the Capitol and thence to their respective shelters in the House Office Buildings. Those leaving by the hall leading to the Chamber will proceed down the steps and thence out the south door on the first floor.

Members having offices in the New House Office Building should go to that building, entering by the main entrance on B Street, where they will be directed to shelter spaces located in the corridors. Members having offices in the Old House Office Building or in the Capitol only and others in the House side of the Capitol should go to the Old House Office Building, entering by the entrance alongside the terrace on New Jersey Avenue nearest B Street, where they will be directed to shelter spaces located in the corridors. All persons should proceed to their respective shelters by way of the Capitol Grounds.

Elevators will not be operated during practice air-raid tests or actual enemy raids.

Air-raid warning signals for the legislative group of buildings will be by the legislative bells and buzzers.

The signals are as follows:

Washington blue, one continuous ring (20 seconds).

Washington white, two short rings.

When the white signal is sounded, the air-raid test has been completed, and all legislative business will be resumed where it left off when the blue signal sounded.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests, first that my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be allowed to speak for 30 minutes today at the conclusion of other special orders heretofore entered, his subject being the Ruml plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Colorado [Mr. HILL] may be permitted to speak for 15 minutes today, following the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

ABSENTEEISM

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, on February 22 the Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously approved H. R. 1691, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON], dealing with the transportation of civilian employees and absenteeism in navy yards and stations. On last Friday the House Rules Committee granted a rule making this bill in order and it was scheduled to be brought up today.

Since the introduction of the original bill 1691 the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON JOHNSON] has introduced another measure, H. R. 1876, dealing with absenteeism on a much broader scale. Because of the widespread attention which the country has given the important subject of absenteeism, it is believed that we can save time, and save the time of the Congress, by combining the Johnson bills. Therefore, the draftsmen are in the process of completing preparation of a measure dealing with the whole subject, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON] will introduce the revised measure shortly. The Committee on Naval Affairs plans to begin hearings on the subject this week.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. NEWSOME asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILWEG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Milwaukee Journal of February 5, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DILWEG]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ALLEN of Illinois addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial on the food shortage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, March 3, after reading of the Journal and at the conclusion of the business on the Speaker's desk, and all other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, also to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech I made in New York on Friday, and also a third time to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Daily Bond Buyer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASIELEWSKI]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from J. H. ROSS, president of the Watercarriers' Association for Petroleum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter written by a constituent on the question of the peace after World War No. 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration may sit on Wednesday next during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

WORK OR FIGHT

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, we have heard much about drafting workers and absenteeism. The El Paso Herald-Post quotes Mr. Barney Baruch as saying in 1931:

> The attempt to draft labor is * * * impossible and dangerous. A soldier serves the Nation directly. He serves to profit no one but the country as a whole.
> Industry is in the hands of millions of private employers. It is operated for profit to them. Enforced and involuntary service for a private master is, and repeatedly has been, defined by our Supreme Court as slavery.
> All this does not say, however, that men not under military discipline are free agents in war. The Government cannot say, "Work here, work there" or "work for Mr. A." But it can say—as it did say in 1918—"Work or fight." The Government can * * * specify whole classes of employment which are not considered essential at all. It can say that if a man be found unfit for military service but fit for other work in the essential lists, he must so employ himself or be cut off from rations, transportation, fuel, and supplies.
> The work-or-fight method is compatible with our institutions and far more effective than any chain gang or impressment that could be invented.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs a question. I understood him to say a moment ago that our committee would begin hearings on the combined Johnson absentee bills this week.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct. The combined bill will be presented to the House this morning. May I say that the bill on the calendar dealing with absenteeism will not be called up today due to the fact we want to consolidate it with another bill dealing with the same subject and in that way save time. We propose to commence hearings on Wednesday morning.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. How long does the chairman think these hearings will continue?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I hope we can get the bill back to the House during the latter part of this week or next Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanmous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

POINT RATIONING

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the recent order by the O. P. A. for rationing canned goods places a penalty on persons who abstained from hoarding, and a premium for those who engaged in hoarding. This is evident from the fact that only 8 points are deducted from a ration book for each excess can declared at the time of registration, while the same can of goods purchased after the system becomes effective will take from 13 to 29 points.

An instance was cited of one Washington woman who admitted that she had on hand more than 1,200 cans of goods. Under the point rationing system she had enough property on hand to consume her entire ration points far beyond the expected period of this war. Under the regulations she could not be denied a book, and not more than 50 percent of the coupons could be deducted. And, although regulations provide further that excess declarations can be deferred for deductions from subsequent ration books, that would not necessarily worry a person who had on hand sufficient canned goods for the duration. The policy is unfair to every other citizen.

The O. P. A. point rationing system, as the same will be operated under current regulations, will be unfair to every family that patriotically and unselfishly heeded the Government's appeal not to hoard. At the same time it will extend a great benefit to those who did hoard canned goods as the regulation covering deductions is applied. The housewife and family who did not hoard canned goods will be from 50 to 75 percent worse off than those who engaged in hoarding. In fairness to all the regulations should be revised.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short statement by C. T. Revere, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short speech made by Mr. Leahy, of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution by the unicameral Legislature of Nebraska opposing war time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial from Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a prepared statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative business and following any special orders heretofore entered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SIMPSON] may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a summary of statements by various Government officials, prepared by the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

FUEL RATIONING

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter from the O. P. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

[Mr. AUCHINCLOSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

STATE DEPARTMENTS OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HORAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein resolutions adopted by the Mississippi Press Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MERRITT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on three occasions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONTRACT BETWEEN AIR LINES AND EXPRESS AGENCIES

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday I made some remarks on the floor pertaining to a certain contract existing between the air lines of the United States and railway express agencies. I also directed those remarks to section 29 of H. R. 1012. On Friday the distinguished gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, placed a statement in the RECORD in which he very nicely said in effect that I did not know what I was talking about. This afternoon, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, I shall discuss that contract. I have a copy of it. I think I shall be able to convince the House that it may be that I do know what I am talking about. If you are interested in that subject matter, I would very much appreciate your listening to my remarks this afternoon.

CAPT. EDDIE RICKENBACKER

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks, and include certain excerpts from newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after the other special orders are concluded, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, also, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I have three requests. First, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to extend my own remarks and include a statement I made over the Mutual Broadcasting System last Sunday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Also, Mr. Speaker, that I be permitted to extend my own remarks and include a brief radio statement made by Dr. John Lee Coulter, over the radio a week ago Sunday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Third, Mr. Speaker, that I be permitted to extend my own remarks and include a letter which I received from James Truslow Adams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SEPARATE COMMITTEE ON AVIATION

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, on the important question of creating a separate committee on aviation, every Member of Congress received today a letter from the president of the Air Line Pilots Association. Because of the importance of this letter in respect to this important subject, I have asked to include it as a part of my remarks today, and commend that every single Member of this House read the letter before he comes to the floor tomorrow at the time that we take up the subject of the creation of a separate committee.

I ask unanimous consent to so extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Roger W. Babson on industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article by Mr. Owen Scott, which is really illuminating, and which I think will be beneficial to every Member to read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include brief excerpts from statements by agricultural colleges and universities of the various States. I have submitted the matter to the Public Printer, and find that it will cost $337.50. Notwithstanding this I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the passing of an illustrious citizen of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a letter by Louis Bromfield on the farm situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders of today I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, upon the conclusion of the legislative business and other special orders, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

PREPAYMENT PURCHASE PRICE OF CERTAIN HOUSING SOLD BY FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 702, to permit the prepayment of the purchase price of certain housing sold to individuals by the Farm Security Administration, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of any contract or agreement for the sale of any real estate to any individual—

(1) by the Department of Agriculture or any agency of the Department of Agriculture; or

(2) by any homestead association or corporation established by the Department of Agriculture or any agency of the Department of Agriculture; or

(3) by the National Housing Agency or any agency of the National Housing Agency, in case such contract or agreement was, prior to February 24, 1942, made by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency of the Department of Agriculture, or any homestead association or corporation established by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency of the Department of Agriculture; or

(4) by the National Housing Agency or any agency of the National Housing Agency, or any homestead association established by the National Housing Agency, or any agency of the National Housing Agency, in case such contract or agreement would, except for Executive Order No. 9070 of February 24, 1942, as amended and supplemented, have been made by the Department of Agriculture or an agency of the Department of Agriculture, or a homestead association or corporation established by the Department of Agriculture or an agency of the Department of Agriculture;

if such contract of agreement provides for the payment of the purchase price in installments over a period of years, no provision of such contract or agreement shall be deemed to prevent the prepayment of any portion of the purchase price, and upon the payment of such purchase price, together with interest (on the amount thereof previously unpaid) to the date of such payment, there shall be delivered to the purchaser a warranty deed to such real estate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRAINING OF NONFARM YOUTH FOR FARM LABOR

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 75, to provide for the training of nonfarm youth for farm labor, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this measure authorizes the appropriation of funds for the training of rural personnel for work on the farms, to be administered largely through the 4–H Clubs. I understand the Committee on Appropriations is now considering this whole subject matter, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

REHABILITATION OF VETERANS DISABLED IN THE PRESENT WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 801, to amend title I of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, and the Veterans Regulations to provide for rehabilitation of disabled veterans, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that this whole rehabilitation program is now under consideration by another committee, I feel that the entire problem should be studied and the House be enabled to pass upon the whole question at one time. I, therefore, object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. I think that is all the Members of the House who will object, if they understand the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are heard, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE TO SERVE IN THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 131, to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAKING TEMPORARY DISABILITY RATINGS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS PERMANENT AFTER 10 YEARS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 799, to make temporary disability ratings of World War veterans permanent after 10 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill changes very substantially the regulations affecting veterans. There is no estimate of the cost involved in it. The Veterans' Administration is opposed to it. It has been the policy of those of us who are looking after these bills that if any bill is presented which is opposed by any department of the Government, it should not be passed by unanimous consent, although in making the request that it go over without prejudice, it is not our intention to indicate any opposition to the bill itself.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman from New York that if he really wants economy in the bureaus of this Nation here is one place he can get it.

I pointed out a few days ago that leaving these veterans' cases open indefinitely to be "boll weeviled" through by employees from time to time not only keeps unnecessary people on the pay roll at great expense, but keeps the serviceman on pins. Let me show you what it means. I pointed out several years ago that when the Pension Bureau was in operation and the Veterans' Administration was in operation, the salaries in the Veterans' Bureau amounted to $43,000,000 a year and in the Pension Bureau about $3,500,000 a year. Taking from that all the personnel we had for hospitals, which would amount to $20,000,000 or $21,000,000 and would still leave $22,000,000 difference.

This bill does not have any effect on the pay a man gets for disability under certain rating, but it does provide that if he has had that rating for 10 years, that unless there is a mistake made or a fraud committed, then his rating is made permanent so far as his rating is concerned, and you do not have this great horde of bureau employees going through the records from time to time and keeping him on pins. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. As I indicated, while we may have no objection to the bill, yet the Veterans' Administration does, and there is no reason why it should not go over for further consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, the Bureau objects; a bureau grows by what it feeds on. Does the gentleman expect to get any bureau to recommend that it be cut? With all deference to the head of the Veterans' Administration, I have been chairman of this committee for 13 years and have been on it ever since it was created. I was asked to go on it by the minority leader, Mr. Garrett, when it was first created. I have gone all through this legislation, and I will say to the gentleman from New York that this bill will not only bring peace of mind to thousands and thousands of veterans, but it will reduce the cost of the Veterans' Administration.

I hope the gentleman from New York will not ask that it go over without prejudice, but that he will permit us to take it up and pass it now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

PROVIDING GOVERNMENT PROTECTION TO WIDOWS AND CHILDREN OF DECEASED WORLD WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1744, to provide Government protection to widows and children of deceased World War veterans.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a letter here from the Veterans' Administration in which it is stated that the cost of this bill for the first year will be $60,000,000, for the second year $61,000,000, for the third year $62,000,000, for the fourth year $62,000,000, and for the fifth year $62,000,000. It is evident that this is not proper legislation to be on the Consent Calendar.

I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

AMENDING VETERANS REGULATION NO. 10, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1749, to amend Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and substituting therefor a colon and the following: "Any officer, enlisted man or woman, member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or Navy Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after December 7, 1941, and before the termination of the present war."

TO AMEND SECTION 23 OF THE IMMIGRATION ACT OF FEBRUARY 5, 1917

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1671, to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] here. Will he explain the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, this bill gives an increase in pay to the Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Some time ago there was a consolidation of two bureaus. During and since that time the duties of the office have been very greatly increased. The number of employees involved in this Bureau now is very much larger than it was.

This simply puts the head of this Bureau on a basis comparable with the heads of other bureaus who get $10,000 a year. The present salary is $9,000. I think it is justified by the conditions under which the Bureau operates, by the importance of the Bureau. It simply brings him on a level with a great many other bureau heads who do work of comparable importance.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I understand, at the time this consolidation was made the head of this Bureau was receiving $9,000, and by reason of the fact that the consolidation did not fix his salary at $10,000 he is not receiving the amount that is received by heads of other similar departments.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

ADDITION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS TO UINTAH AND OURAY RESERVATION, UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 837, to restore and add certain public lands to the Uintah and Ouray Reservation in Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is another measure which has been approved by the Committee on the Public Lands but has not cleared the Budget Bureau. We feel this bill should not be passed by unanimous consent. The Budget Bureau having the tremendous burdens it has at this time, we feel it should be aided in its efforts; therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE]?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1730, to amend paragraph (1) of section 5 (e) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GRANT OF PARCEL OF LAND TO CITY OF SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 21, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant to the city of San Diego for street purposes a parcel of land situated in the city of San Diego and State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to grant and convey, under such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, to the city of San Diego, State of California, for use as a public street, all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to a strip of land containing 5,950 square feet contiguous to Lytton Street between Barnett Avenue and Rosecrans Street at the United States Naval Training Station, San Diego, Calif.

SEC. 2. That if any part of the above-described lands hereby granted to the city of San Diego shall be used for any other purpose or purposes, or shall cease to be maintained by the city of San Diego for the purpose for which granted, such part shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike out lines 8 and 9.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COST OF TRANSPORTATION OF CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1691, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to pay the costs of transportation of certain civilian employees, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be withdrawn from consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to pay the costs of transportation of civilian employees to places of duty in the Naval Establishment outside the continental United States, or in Alaska, and return, upon relief therefrom, to the places at which they were engaged or from which they were transferred for such duty: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer such employees from one station to another without their consent.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall remain in force during the present war and until 6 months thereafter, or until such earlier time as the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution may designate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 129 was laid on the table.

ATTENDANCE OF PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY AT EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1912, to authorize the attendance of personnel of the Army of the United States as students at educational institutions and other places.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of what this bill is?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer the gentleman's question. May I say that the provisions of this bill are necessary for the Army's specialized training program in the small and large colleges. Without the removal of certain restrictions in the basic act of last year it would not be possible to accomplish the large technical training program in the colleges and scientific schools throughout the country, which most Members of Congress desire to be carried out.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I understand this bill, it will use the college establishments—large and small—for this training. Has this been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. ANDREWS. It has been unanimously reported; yes.

Mr. RANKIN. What are some of the restrictions?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, Public, 435 of the last Congress placed a limitation for training of 2 percent of the total personnel of enlisted men and officers who might be sent to technical training schools. That was passed chiefly because of the necessity for Signal Corps and Air Corps training: for example, radio engineers and electrical engineers.

The present bill raises the old limitation. It takes away the limitation, it being the Army's intention to train about 6 percent, and this is necessary, because of their desire to train 18-, 19-, and 20-year-old men in colleges in specialist subjects. It is essential for the entire project which has been set up in the last few months.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from New York state how many will be trained under this program?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am not able at the moment to give the exact number. It will probably be nearly 200,000, I would think as an offhand guess. The original list of colleges included 400 to 450 and this is being increased from week to week down to the smaller colleges, it being the desire of the War and Navy Departments to sprinkle the program over as many colleges as possible.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Has the gentleman any information as to how many colleges or universities will be included?

Mr. ANDREWS. I could not tell the gentleman exactly. There are about 1,500 in all in the country, and they hope to include just as many as possible.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What will be the cost?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not recollect the total cost, although the figures are available.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Or the cost per student?

Mr. ANDREWS. The cost per student will be considerably less than it would be for the same student attending the same institution in a regular course at his own expense.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many of the so-called smaller colleges, if the gentleman can tell us, have thus far been selected?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am unable to give that definitely, but the gentleman may call the War Department—office of G–1, Colonel Beukema—and they will give him the up-to-the-minute information. They started out not long ago with over 400 in the first selection just for the Army alone. The colleges are selected by a 9-man board—3 from the Army, 3 from the Navy, and 3 civilians representing the Manpower Commission.

Mr. CELLER. Is there a disposition to avoid a so-called educational black-out by keeping in operation most of our small colleges?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is exactly what is in mind.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, have they included the world-famous colleges, Harvard and Princeton?

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman should know better than to ask that question.

Mr. FISH. That is not an answer. I want information.

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes; they have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate. Without objection, the Senate bill will be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 435, Seventy-seventh Congress, approved February 6, 1942, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That during the present war and for 6 months thereafter and notwithstanding other provisions of existing law, personnel of all components of the Army of the United States may be detailed as students at technical, professional, and other educational institutions or as students, observers, or investigators at industrial plants, hospitals, and other places, and all necessary expenses incident thereto shall be payable from any appropriations available to the Military Establishment: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as authorizing the acquisition of real estate by the War Department, except by lease, for use in the Army specialized training program."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 1912) was laid on the table.

CITY OF ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 338, to authorize the incorporated city of Anchorage, Alaska, to purchase and improve the electric light and power system of the Anchorage Light & Power Co., Inc., an Alaska corporation, and for such purpose to issue bonds in the sum of not to exceed $1,250,000 in excess of present statutory debt limits.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated city of Anchorage, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to purchase and acquire from Anchorage Light & Power Co., Inc.,a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Alaska, any or all of the electric light and power properties owned by said corporation, including electric current, light and power plants and systems, and all or any part of the property, both real and personal, rights, claims, easements, interests, and equities connected therewith, and to reconstruct, extend, and improve the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in an amount not exceeding $1,250,000, the same to be in excess of the present statutory debt limit of said city as provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes," approved May 28, 1936 (49 Stat. 1388): Provided, That no more than $1,000,000 of the proceeds of the sale of said bonds may be used for purposes of purchasing and acquiring such properties. Nothing herein shall be so construed as to prevent or preclude the said city from incurring other indebtedness up to, but not beyond the limits prescribed by said act of May 28, 1936, without regard to the bonded indebtedness herein authorized.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued, a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Anchorage, Alaska, at which election the question of whether such indebtedness should be incurred and such bonds shall be issued in any amount not exceeding $1,250,000 for the purposes hereinbefore set forth, shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city whose names appear on the last assessment roll of record of said city for purposes of municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that such electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds in any amount not exceeding $1,250,000 for the purposes herein specified. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office in said city. The election notice shall state the date of said election, shall describe the polling place or places, and the times the same will be open, and shall state that bonds of said city in any amount not exceeding $1,250,000 are proposed to be issued for the purposes herein specified. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law for general or special elections in said city. Such bonds shall be issued to raise money for the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than 55 percent of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. The bonds herein authorized shall be coupon bonds, shall be negotiable instruments for all purposes, and shall bear such date or dates, be in such denomination or denominations, mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, be payable at such place or places, and be sold at either public or private sale, be redeemable or nonredeemable before maturity either with or without premium, and carry registration privileges as to either principal and interest, or principal only, as may be prescribed by the Common Council of the City of Anchorage, Alaska. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and the clerk of said city and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city. The coupons to be annexed to such bonds shall bear the facsimile signatures of the mayor and of the clerk of said city. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, said signatures or countersignatures, whether manual or facsimile, shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes, the same as if said officers had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the Common Council of the City of Anchorage not to exceed 5 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and said bonds shall be sold at not less than par plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said city of Anchorage, payable as to both principal and interest from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of such municipality in an amount sufficient to pay the interest and principal of such bonds as the same shall become due and payable. The city of Anchorage is hereby granted the further right to pay said bonds out of the net revenues of the utility to be purchased with the proceeds of the bond issue, and any additions thereto, and to pledge the revenues from such utility, after all necessary expenses of maintenance and operation shall have been paid, in an amount sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as the same shall become due and payable.

SEC. 5. Any ordinance of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, authorizing the issuance of these bonds, or fixing the terms and covenants thereof, or both, may contain covenants by the city in order to protect and safeguard the security and the rights of the holders of these bonds, including covenants as to, among other things—

(a) The use and disposition of the revenues of said utility and any additions or betterments thereto the cost of which is to be defrayed with such proceeds, including the creation and maintenance of funds to be used for operation and maintenance, for renewals and replacements to said utility, and for disposition of any surplus from said revenues.

(b) The establishing and maintaining of adequate rates and charges for electric energy and other services, facilities, and commodities sold, furnished, or supplied by said utility sufficient to pay all cost of maintenance and operation, bond service, and other charges upon the gross revenues as provided by ordinance.

(c) The operation, maintenance, management, accounting, and auditing of said utility.

(d) Limitations upon the right of the city of Anchorage to dispose of all or any part of such utility without making provision for payment of all outstanding bonds.

(e) That the Common Council of the City of Anchorage is authorized to create a board of three members to be known as the board of public utility commissioners, which board shall manage and control the operation of said utility.

SEC. 6. If the Common Council of the City of Anchorage shall deem it advisable, said city may issue all or any part of the bonds authorized by this act not used for the purchase of such utility for the purpose of making any necessary extensions, additions, or improvements to said utility. Bonds for these purposes may be a part of the same issue of bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing said utility, and shall be payable from the same fund, or they may be issued in different series and may mature at any time subsequent to the last maturity of the original issue, but in any event may not mature more than 30 years from date thereof, or may mature concurrently with bonds of said original issue maturing on or subsequent to January 1, 1955. Regardless of whether or not said bonds are issued in series, any bonds issued to pay for any such extensions, additions, or improvements shall rank pari passu with the original bonds issued for the purchase of such utility.

SEC. 7. No part of the funds arising from the sale of any or all of the bonds authorized by this act shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act and authorized at the election authorizing the issuance of the same. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the City of Anchorage shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be used only for the purposes or any of them hereinbefore mentioned, and under the orders and direction of said common council from time to time as such proceeds may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 8. If the Common Council of the City of Anchorage shall deem it advisable, any or all of the bonds, the issuance of which is authorized by this act, may be refunded. Said refunding bonds may be exchanged for said outstanding bonds or may be sold at not less than par at public or private sale, and the proceeds of such sale shall be used only for the payment of the bonds being refunded: Provided, That such refunding bonds shall bear an interest rate not greater than the bonds being refunded. Said refunding bonds may mature not later than 30 years from date and shall be payable in such amounts and at such times and places as the Common Council of the City of Anchorage shall prescribe.

SEC. 9. The said city of Anchorage is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under any act or acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the relief of unemployment or for any other public purpose, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said municipality in financing any public works; or to enter into contracts with any persons or corporations, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the Common Council of said City of Anchorage and the United States of America, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or any such purchaser.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVISION OF THE ALASKA GAME LAW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 332, to revise the Alaska game law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman from Alaska explain in what particular the game laws of Alaska will be changed, modified, or revised.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the principal proposed change in the Alaska game laws is designed to take care of the people in the military service who have gone to Alaska within the last 2 years. Under the present law it is impossible for men in the military service who have been sent to Alaska from the States to acquire the right of residence for the purpose of taking game in the Territory. The distinction is that a nonresident license for large game costs $50 and a nonresident license for small game costs $10, while a resident license for both small and large game costs $2. The principal purpose of the bill is to treat the soldier and the sailor just the same as other people who come to Alaska and give them the right of residence when they have been in Alaska for the statutory period of 1 year.

There is another purpose of the bill, a minor one, and that is to clarify the status of Filipinos. There has always been some measure of doubt as to whether they ought to be classed as aliens or citizens. This bill would classify them as citizens for the purpose of this law only, so that they could get licenses as residents of Alaska.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, if those Filipinos were soldiers, it seems to me it would be in order to give them the same right you give American soldiers, but I cannot understand why you would want to give a Filipino civilian the right to come to Alaska and get a special privilege to kill the game that is rapidly diminishing there now.

Mr. DIMOND. I suggest to the gentleman that they are not going to get any special privileges. They are simply to be treated as residents of Alaska after they have been there for a year, which is the period of residence required of everybody. May I point out to the gentleman a matter which he knows even better than I, that the Filipinos are not aliens, neither are they citizens, they are "nationals." The only distinction that can be made in the law is to treat them as residents. Since their heroic defense of their cause and our cause in the Philippines, I think we may well treat them as residents. The number involved is very small, and this provision of the bill has no opposition in Alaska.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman that I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill as far as these Filipinos are concerned, but if any other bill is brought in here to spread this privilege further, I shall object.

There are three things in Alaska that, to my mind, are worthy of preservation. Our greatest asset in Alaska is the fish. The fisheries of Alaska bring in at least $60,000,000 a year. The next greatest asset we have in Alaska is the fur-bearing animals. Every time you send someone out into the woods with a gun to kill those animals you decrease the supply and drive toward the ultimate extinction of the fur-bearing animals in that area. The next greatest asset is the timber, which we are now trying to conserve.

I am not willing to throw Alaska open to everybody who wants to go there for a short time to shoot a gun and destroy what fur-bearing animals we have now, because the time will come if it has not already arrived when many of the people of Alaska are going to want to make their living from these fur-bearing animals. So any other spread of this privilege will be objected to if I am on the floor when the bill comes up.

Mr. DIMOND. I am grateful to the gentleman from Mississippi for his vision and his intelligent and sympathetic and active interest in Alaska and Alaskans, and I can assure him that the people of Alaska are just as solicitous as anybody can be to preserve the fur-bearing and the game animals of Alaska. There is nothing in this bill which will tend to break down the protection of the law as to either the fur-bearing animals or the game animals.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not questioning the desire of the people of Alaska to preserve the fur-bearing animals. I have been to Alaska. I was on the Committee on the Territories for 15 years or more. I am familiar with the situation in Alaska. But I want Alaska saved for the Alaskan people. I was delighted that the privilege was given to the city of Anchorage a few moments ago to increase its power facilities. We have enough water power going to waste in Alaska to supply the United States if it could be used. I want what is in Alaska saved for the people of Alaska, and not have it made a preying ground for people who want to go there from every section of the globe.

Mr. DIMOND. That is completely admirable. All Alaskans agree with that doctrine.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman from Mississippi call attention to the great value that is being obtained for the people of Alaska and the United States from the fisheries and the fur-bearing animals and the other valuable properties there. The gentleman representing Alaska is familiar with the situation. If I am not mistaken, there are a great many valuable minerals there and many other things of great value.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has asked a vital question. Alaska has billions and billions and billions of tons of coal. It has enormous timber resources. It has already produced about $600,000,000 worth of gold and has at least that much left in the ground for future mining. It has valuable deposits of copper, platinum, antimony, tungsten, tin, and other minerals, for which the world is clamoring now. In addition, it has some 40,000,000 acres of just as good agricultural and grazing land as can be found anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Is that the same Alaska that we obtained from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes, it is.

Mr. SABATH. That is the same Alaska?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. That was not such a bad deal, was it?

Mr. DIMOND. No.

Mr. RANKIN. And that is the same Alaska that the Japs are trying to take away from us now.

Mr. DIMOND. Yes. Now to continue my answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], the bill before us further seeks to amend the existing law in such manner as to give the Alaska Game Commission control over game or fresh water fishes, making it possible to restock depleted streams and lakes and to stock waters that are at present barren, and to control fishing of game fish so as to prevent depletion; to permit integration of the Fishery Service and the Wildlife Service in Alaska in the interest of more efficient administration; to give the Alaska Game Commission authority to more completely control the hunting of big game animals in any area where there is danger of depletion by putting a limit on the total number of such animals that can be taken out of any area; and to give the Secretary of the Interior discretionary authority to revise downward the license fees prescribed in section 10 of the bill so that in all possible cases additional provisions may be made for those in military service where that can be done without risk of depletion.

The bill does not cover the licensing or regulation of commercial fishing operations. All commercial fishing in Alaska is regulated and controlled under an entirely separate law. The power of the Secretary of the Interior, outlined in section 9, to regulate the manner in which "game fishes may be taken, possessed, transported, bought or sold" does not embrace the power to regulate commercial fishing but only the power to regulate game fishing or fishing for sport. A license for fishing under this bill is required only when the fishing is not commercial in nature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to establish an Alaska Game Commission, to protect game animals, land fur-bearing animals, and birds in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 13, 1925, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Definitions: That for the purposes of this act the following shall be construed, respectively, to mean:

"Commission: The Alaska Game Commission.

"Secretary: The Secretary of the Interior.

"Director: Director, Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior.

"Executive officer: Executive officer, Alaska Game Commission.

"Territory: Territory of Alaska.

"Person: The plural or the singular, as the case demands, including individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations, unless the context otherwise requires.

"Indians: Natives of one-half or more Indian blood.

"Eskimo: Natives of one-half or more Eskimo blood.

"Take: Taking, pursuing, disturbing, hunting, capturing, trapping, or killing game animals, fur animals, game or nongame birds, or game fishes; attempting to take, pursue, disturb, hunt, capture, trap, or kill such animals, birds, or game fishes, or setting or using a net, trap, or other device for taking them, or collecting the nests or eggs of such birds, unless the context otherwise requires. Whenever the taking of animals, birds, or nests or eggs of birds, or game fishes is permitted, reference is had to taking by lawful means and in lawful manner.

"Open season: The time during which animals, birds, or game fishes may lawfully be taken. Each period of time prescribed as an open season shall be construed to include the first and last days thereof.

"Closed season: The time during which animals, birds, or game fishes may not be taken.

"Transport: Shipping, transporting, carrying, importing, exporting, or receiving or delivering for shipment, transportation, carriage, or export, unless the context otherwise requires.

"Game animals: Deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep, mountain goat, bison, muskox, and the large brown, grizzly, and black bears, which shall be known also as big game, and such other animals as the Secretary has or shall declare, as hereinafter provided, to be game animals, to be known also as big game if so designated in the declaration, including those that have been or may hereafter be transplanted, introduced, or reintroduced into the Territory, or any part thereof.

"Fur animals: Beaver, muskrat, marmot, raccoon, pika, hare or rabbit, squirrel, fisher, fox, lynx, marten or sable, mink, weasel or ermine, sea otter, land otter, wolverine, coyote, wolf, and polar bear, and such other animals as have been or may hereafter be transplanted, introduced, or reintroduced into the Territory, or any part thereof, and found and declared by the Secretary to be fur animals: Provided, That whenever the Secretary shall find that in any section of Alaska any animal is predominantly taken as a game rather than as a fur animal, or is predominantly taken as a fur animal rather than as a game animal, he shall so declare and then and thereafter, so long as such declaration remains in effect, such animal in the specified section of Alaska shall be considered to be a game animal or fur animal as the case may be, to the same extent as if it had been expressly included in the foregoing definitions of game and fur animals.

"Game birds: Anatidae, commonly known as waterfowl, including ducks, geese, brant, and swans; Haematopodidae, Charadriidae, Scolopacidae, and Phalaropodidae, commonly known as shorebirds, including oyster-catchers, plover, sandpipers, snipe, curlew, and phalaropes; Gruidae, commonly known as crane; and the several species of grouse and ptarmigan, and such other birds as have been or may hereafter be transplanted, introduced, or reintroduced into the Territory, or any part thereof, and found and declared by the Secretary to be game birds.

"Nongame birds: All wild birds except game birds.

"Hunting: The taking, as herein defined, of game animals, game birds, and nongame birds.

"Trapping: The taking, as herein defined, of fur animals.

"Game fishes: Rainbow, steelhead, cutthroat, eastern brook, and Dolly Varden trout, and grayling, and such other fishes as the Secretary may declare, from time to time, to be game fishes.

"SEC. 3. Residence and citizenship: That for the purposes of this act a citizen or a national of the United States who has resided in the Territory for a continuous period of 12 months immediately preceding his claim for resident hunting, trapping, fishing, or other privileges under this act, or a person not a citizen or a national of the United States who has in good faith declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, whose declaration of intention is in good standing, and who has resided in the Territory for a like period, shall be considered a resident: Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary shall determine the fur resources of Alaska are threatened by hunting or trapping, or from other causes, he may, in his discretion and for such periods as he shall determine, extend the required residence period in the Territory from 12 months to 3 years as a prerequisite to obtaining a resident trapping license; a citizen or a national of the United States who has not resided in the Territory for a continuous period of 12 months, or for the extended period of 3 years, as the case may be, immediately preceding his claim for resident privileges shall be considered a nonresident; and a person not a citizen or a national of the United States who is not a resident of the Territory, as defined in this section, shall be considered an alien.

"SEC. 4. Alaska Game Commission created: That a Commission to be known as the Alaska Game Commission is hereby created. The Commission shall consist of an executive officer and four other members. The executive officer of the Commission shall be the representative of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, designated by the Director to occupy that position, and he shall provide for the due administration of the functions of the Commission under this act. The other four members of the Commission shall be appointed by the Secretary to serve for 4 years unless sooner removed: Provided, That the present members of the Alaska Game Commission appointed pursuant to section 4 of the act of January 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 739), are hereby made the appointed members of the Alaska Game Commission as reorganized and continued hereunder, each to serve a term of office equal to the unexpired term of his office as a member of the Alaska Game Commission under the provisions of the act of January 13, 1925. Each member of the Commission appointed by the Secretary shall be a resident citizen of the judicial division from which he is appointed and shall have been a resident of Alaska for at least 5 years before his appointment, but not more than one resident of a judicial division shall serve on the Commission at one time, and no Federal or Territorial employee shall be appointed as a member of the Commission. The Secretary may remove a commissioner for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or misconduct in office, giving him a copy of the charges against him and opportunity to be publicly heard in person or by counsel in his own defense; pending the investigation of the charges, the Secretary may suspend such commissioner. The Secretary shall fill vacancies on the Commission by appointment for the unexpired term, and a vacancy shall be filled by appointment from the same judicial division in which it occurs. The office of any commissioner shall be vacant upon his removing his residence from the judicial division from which he was appointed.

"Members of the Commission, other than the executive officer, shall receive no compensation for their services as members thereof, except a per diem of $10 for each member for each day going to and from and in actual attendance at meetings of the Commission, but the total salary or per diem compensation of the member from the second judicial division shall not exceed the sum of $1,500, and that of any of the other members, except the executive officer, the sum of $900 in any one fiscal year, and each such member in addition shall have reimbursed to him actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses incurred or made in the discharge of his official duties, in accordance with the fiscal regulations of the Department of the Interior, which shall be paid on proper vouchers from the appropriation for the enforcement of the Alaska game law. The executive officer shall be paid his salary and shall have reimbursed to him all actual and necessary traveling and other expenses and disbursements in accordance with the fiscal regulations of the Department of the Interior from the appropriation for the enforcement of the Alaska game law and from such other appropriations for the work of the Fish and Wildlife Service in the Territory as the Director may designate.

"The Commission shall maintain and have its principal office in the capital of the Territory.

"A majority of the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. All investigations, inquiries, hearings, and decisions of a commissioner shall be deemed to be the investigations, inquiries, hearings, and decisions of the Commission, when approved by it and entered by it in its minutes, and every order made by a commissioner, when approved and confirmed by the Commission and ordered filed in its office, shall be, and be deemed to be the order of the Commission. The Commission shall have an official seal.

"SEC. 5. Duties and powers of the Commission, wildlife agents, and other persons: That each member of the Commission, any employee of the Department of the Interior authorized by the Secretary to enforce this act, any marshal, deputy marshal, collector or deputy collector of customs, shall have power, in or out of the Territory, and it shall be his duty to arrest without warrant any person committing a violation of this act in his presence or view, and to take such person immediately for examination or trial before a officer or court of competent jurisdiction; he shall have power to execute any warrant or other process issued by an officer or court of competent jurisdiction for the enforcement of the provisions of this act; and he shall have authority, with a search warrant, to search any place at any time. Any officer or other person empowered to enforce this act shall have authority without warrant to search any camp, camp outfit, fish creel, pack or pack animals, automobile, aircraft, wagon, or other vehicle, sled, or any boat, vessel, or other craft in the territorial waters of the United States, or any boat, vessel, or other craft of the United States on the high seas when such officer or employee has reasonable cause to believe that such camp, camp outfit, fish creel, pack or pack animals, automobile, aircraft, wagon, or other vehicle, sled, boat, vessel, or other craft has therein or thereon any of the animals, birds, or fishes, or parts thereof, or nests or eggs of birds, protected by this act taken, possessed, sold, intended for sale, or transported contrary to law. The several judges of the courts established under the laws of the United States and United States commissioners may, within their respective jurisdictions, upon proper oath or affirmation showing probable cause, issue warrants in all such cases. All guns, traps, nets, fishing tackle, boats, aircraft, wagons or other vehicles, dogs, sleds, and other paraphernalia used in or in aid of a violation of this act may be seized, and all animals, birds, game fishes, or parts thereof, or nests or eggs of birds, taken, transported, or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act shall be seized within or outside the Territory by any officer or person authorized to enforce this act, and upon conviction of the offender or upon judgment of a court of the United States that the same were being used or were taken, transported, or possessed in violation of this act, shall be forfeited to the United States and disposed of as directed by the court having jurisdiction, and if sold the proceeds of sale shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the executive officer to be disposed of as provided in subdivision K of section 10 of this act. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 6. Bond of employees: That before entering upon the duties of his office, the executive officer shall execute and file with the Secretary a bond to the people of the United States in the sum of $1,000, with sufficient sureties, and each wildlife agent or other person authorized by the executive officer to sell licenses shall so file such a bond in the sum of $500, conditioned for the faithful performance of their respective duties, and for the proper accounting and paying over, pursuant to law, of all moneys or property received by them, respectively. Each person so bonded shall have reimbursed to him on proper voucher the premium paid by him on his bond.

"SEC. 7 Taking of animals, birds, and game fishes restricted: That, unless and except as permitted by this act or by regulations made pursuant to this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to take, possess, transport, sell, offer to sell, purchase, or offer to purchase any game animal, fur animal, game fish, game bird, nongame bird, or any part thereof, or any nest or egg of any such bird, or to molest, damage, or destroy beaver or muskrat houses: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the collection or exportation of such animals, game fishes, birds, parts thereof, or nests or eggs of birds, for scientific or educational purposes, or of live animals, game fishes, birds, or eggs of birds for propagation or exhibition purposes, under a permit issued by the Director, pursuant to regulations hereinafter authorized to be adopted by the Secretary. Fur or game animals and game birds which escape from captivity, unless recaptured by their owners in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, and all fur and game animals and game birds which have been or may hereafter be transplanted, introduced, or reintroduced into the Territory, or any part thereof, are declared to be wild fur or game animals or game birds, as the case may be, and shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 8. Poison, use prohibited: That no person shall at any time use any poison to kill any animal or bird protected by this act or put out poison or a poisoned bait where any such animal or bird may come in contact with it; but a wildlife agent or predatory animal hunter may use poison to kill wolves, coyotes, or wolverines, under such regulations as the Commission may adopt; and no person shall sell or give any strychnine or other poison designated by the Commission to any hunter or trapper. No hunter or trapper shall have any strychnine or other poison designated by the Commission in his possession, and any such poison found in the possession of any such person shall be seized and disposed of in such manner as the Commission may determine. Any person selling or otherwise disposing of any strychnine or any other poison designated by the Commission shall keep a record in a special book showing the name and address of each person purchasing or otherwise procuring it and the kind and amount thereof, which record shall at all times be open to inspection by any wildlife agent or other officer authorized to enforce this act, and he shall transmit such information monthly to the Commission.

"SEC. 9. Regulations: That the Secretary, upon consultation with or recommendation from the Commission, is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to determine when, to what extent, if at all, and by what means game animals, fur animals, game birds, nongame birds, and nests or eggs of birds, and game fishes may be taken, possessed, transported, bought, or sold, and to adopt suitable regulations permitting and governing the same in accordance with such determinations, which regulations shall become effective on the date specified therein; but no such regulations shall permit any person to take any female yearling or calf moose, any fawn deer, or any female or lamb mountain sheep except under permit for scientific, propagation, exhibition, or educational purposes; or to use any dog in taking game animals; or to sell the heads, hides, or horns of any game animals, except the hides of moose, caribou, deer, and mountain goat, or skins of black bear, which the regulations may permit to be sold under such restrictions as said Secretary may deem to be appropriate; or to use any shotgun larger than a number 10 gage; or to use any aircraft, or steam or power launch, or any boat other than one propelled by paddle, oars, or pole, in taking game animals or game birds; or to sell any game animals, game birds, or parts thereof to the owner, master, or employee of any coastal or river steamer or commercial power or sailboat, or to procure for serving or to serve any such game animals, game birds, or parts thereof in any cannery or to the employees on any such steamer or boat; nor, except as herein provided, shall prohibit any Indian or Eskimo, prospector, or traveler to take animals, birds, or game fishes during the closed season when he is in need of food and other sufficient food is not available, but the shipment or sale of any animals, birds, or game fishes, or parts thereof so taken shall not be permitted, except that the hides of animals so taken may be sold within the Territory, but said Secretary by regulation may prohibit such native Indians or Eskimos, prospectors, or travelers from taking any species of animals, birds, or game fishes for food during the closed season in any section of the Territory within which he shall determine that the supply of such species of animals, birds, or game fishes is in danger of extermination; nor shall any such regulation contravene any of the provisions of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations: Provided, That no person shall knowingly disturb, injure, or destroy any notice, signboard, seal, tag, aircraft, boat, vessel, automobile, sled, dog, dog team, paraphernalia, equipment, building, or other improvement or property of the United States used in the administration or enforcement of the provisions of this act, or any poster or notice to the public concerning the provisions of this act or any regulation adopted pursuant hereto, or any marker indicating the boundary of any area closed to hunting, trapping, fishing, or other special use under the provisions of this act, or shall knowingly destroy, remove, tamper with, or imitate any seal or tag issued or used by the Commission or attached under its authority to any skin, portion, or specimen of a wild animal, bird, game fish, or other article for purposes of identification or authentication in accordance with the provisions of this act or any regulations adopted hereunder.

"SEC. 10. Licenses: Subdivision A—Nonresident, hunting, trapping, and fishing licenses. That except as otherwise permitted by this act, or by any regulation or order made pursuant hereto, no nonresident as defined by section 3 of this act shall take or possess any of the animals, birds, or game fishes protected by this act, or by any regulation or order authorized hereunder, without first having procured a nonresident hunting, trapping, or fishing license as herein provided.

"Subdivision B—Resident export licenses and permits: No resident of the Territory shall transport therefrom any game animal, bird, game fish, or part thereof, unless he has (a) a resident export and return license, which will entitle him to transport out of the Territory for mounting and return to him in the Territory within 1 year such game animal, bird, game fish, or part thereof, as shall have been legally acquired by him and which shall be specifically identified in the license, or (b) a resident export permit, which may be issued in such circumstances and upon such conditions as the Commission may prescribe, and which will entitle him to export from the Territory for other than return, but not for sale, such game animal, bird, game fish, or part thereof, as shall have been legally acquired by him and which shall be specifically identified in the permit.

"Subdivision C—Resident hunting, trapping, and fishing licenses: The Commission, whenever it shall deem expedient, may by regulation require residents of the Territory to procure resident hunting, trapping, and fishing licenses authorizing them to take animals, birds, and game fishes protected by this act, and after the effective date of such regulation, no resident shall take any animal, bird, or game fish protected by this act without having first procured resident hunting, trapping, and fishing licenses as herein provided. The fee for such licenses shall be as follows: For each fishing license the sum of $1; for each hunting license, which shall include the privilege of fishing, the sum of $2; and for each trapping license, which shall include the privilege of hunting and fishing, the sum of $3; but no such license sha be required of native Indians and Eskimos, or of residents under the age of 16.

"Subdivision D—Registered guide license: Only a person who is a resident of the Territory, as defined in section 3 of this act, may act as guide for a nonresident in any section of the Territory where the Commission by regulation, and the Commission is hereby authorized to issue such regulations, requires nonresidents to employ guides prior to engaging in authorized big-game hunting privileges, and he shall first register with the Commission on a form which it shall provide for this purpose and procure a registered guide license as herein provided, and the Commission shall determine by regulation the qualifications required of such guides. No person other than a registered guide shall act as guide for a nonresident in any section of the Territory where guides are required by regulation of the Commission to be registered.

"Subdivision E—Alien special licenses: No alien shall take any of the animals, birds, or game fishes protected by this act, or own or be possessed of a shotgun, rifle, or other firearm, without first having procured an alien special license, except that an alien may take game fishes protected by this act upon first having procured an alien fishing license, as herein provided.

"Subdivision F—Records, reports: Each person to whom a license is issued to take animals or birds, or to deal in furs, shall keep records which shall show the kind and number of each species of animals or birds so taken, purchased, or otherwise procured under such license, the persons from whom they were purchased and to whom they were sold, date of purchase or sale, name of the trapper, and the number of the trapper's license, and shall, on or before 30 days after the expiration of his license, make a written report to the Commission on a form prepared and furnished by it setting forth in full the data herein required to be recorded. Such records shall at all reasonable times be subject to inspection and examination by any officer or other person empowered to enforce this act. Any licensee who shall fail correctly to keep such records or who shall fail to submit such report or who shall in any such report knowingly falsely state any such data or who shall refuse to exhibit his records for inspection and examination as herein required shall be punished as prescribed in section 15 of this act.

"Subdivision G—Fur-farm license: No person shall engage in the business of farming fur animals or possess them for purposes of propagation without first having procured a fur-farm license as herein provided.

"Subdivision H—Fur dealers, licenses, fees: No person shall buy or sell the skins of fur animals, or engage in, carry on, or be concerned in the business of buying, selling, or trading in the skins of fur animals protected by this act without first having procured a license as herein provided, but no license shall be required of a hunter or trapper selling the skins of such animals which he has lawfully taken, or of a person not engaged or employed in the business of trading in such skins to purchase them for his own use but not for sale, or of native Indians or Eskimos, or of cooperative stores operated exclusively by and for native Indians or Eskimos, or of stores operated by missions, exclusively for native Indians or Eskimos: Provided, That the stores exempted from procuring licenses as herein provided shall, on or before 30 days after the expiration of each license year as specified in this act, make a written statement to the Commission, on a form prepared and furnished by it, setting forth such material facts concerning the management and operation of such store as the Commission may by such form require and in addition thereto shall keep the records, make the reports, incur the penalties, and in all other respects be subject to the requirements of subdivision F of section 10 to the same extent as licensed fur dealers.

"The applicant for such a license shall accompany his application by the required fee as follows:

"(a) If the applicant is a resident of the Territory, $10, or is an association or copartnership composed exclusively of residents of the Territory, organized under the laws of the Territory, for each member, $10.

"(b) If the applicant is a nonresident of the Territory but is a citizen or national of the United States, or is a corporation composed exclusively of citizens or nationals of the United States, organized under the laws of the Territory or of a State of the United States, or is an association or copartnership composed exclusively of citizens or nationals of the United States, organized under the laws of the Territory or of a State of the United States, any member of which is a nonresident of the Territory, $100.

"(c) If the applicant is an alien, or is a corporation, association, or copartnership, not organized under the laws of the Territory or of a State of the United States, or is a corporation, association, or copartnership, any stockholder or member of which is an alien, $500.

"(d) If the applicant is a resident of the Territory and an agent in charge of a station of a fur dealer of either of the classes (a), (b), or (c), or a resident itinerant agent of such dealer, $10.

"(e) If the applicant is a nonresident of the Territory but a citizen or national of the United States and an agent in charge of a station of a fur dealer of either of the classes (a), (b), or (c), or a nonresident citizen or national itinerant agent of such dealer, $100.

"(f) If the applicant is an alien and an agent in charge of a station of a fur dealer of either of the classes (a), (b), or (c), or an alien itinerant agent of such dealer, $500: Provided, That no license shall be issued to any agent whose principal has not procured a license in accordance with (a), (b), or (c).

"Subdivision I. Fees and application for, and issuance of, licenses and permits: Licenses and resident export permits shall be issued by the executive officer through wildlife agents and other persons authorized by him in writing to sell licenses. Resident export licenses and permits may also be issued by customs officers. Application blanks for licenses and permits shall be furnished by the Commission and shall be in such form as the Commission may by regulation determine. Each application shall be subscribed and sworn to by the applicant before an officer authorized to administer oaths in the Territory. Members of the Commission, wildlife agents, and other persons authorized in writing by the executive officer to issue licenses, and postmasters and customs officers, are he eby authorized to administer such oaths. The applicant for a license or resident export permit shall accompany his application with a license or permit fee as follows: Nonresident general hunting, trapping, and fishing license, $50; nonresident hunting and fishing license, but not including the privilege of hunting big game, $10; nonresident fishing license, $2.50; resident export and return license, $1 for each animal or bird trophy; resident export permit, if shipper is removing residence, $1 for each animal, $1 for each bird, or if shipper is not removing residence, $5 for each animal, $1 for each bird; registered guide license, $10; alien special hunting, trapping, and fishng license, $100; alien fishing license, $2.50; and fur-farm license, $2. Whenever the Secretary determines that the circumstances justify the charging of lesser fees for any class of licenses or permits than the fees specified in this section, he may by regulation prescribe reduced schedules of fees to be paid for the issuance of licenses or permits of that class, and during the period any such regulation is in effect no greater fee shall be charged for any license or permit of the class involved than the fee so prescribed by the Secretary.

"Subdivision J. False statements in application for and alteration and expiration of licenses and permits: Any false statement in an application for a license or permit as to citizenship, place of residence, or other material facts shall render null and void the licenses or permits issued upon it. Any person who shall make any false statements in an application for a license or permit shall be guilty of a violation of this act and upon conviction of any such violation shall be punished as provided in section 15 hereof. No person shall alter, change, loan, or transfer to another any license or permit issued to him in pursuance of this act, nor shall any person other than the one to whom it is issued use such license or permit, and each of such licenses shall expire on the 30th day of June next succeeding its issuance.

"Subdivision K—Proceeds of licenses and permits: The Commission is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations permitting each officer or person selling licenses or permits, other than officers or employees of the United States, to retain for his own use and benefit such portion of the proceeds of each sale made by him, not exceeding 10 percent thereof, as the Commission may from time to time allot for the purpose of compensating such officer or person for his services in connection with the issuance of licenses or permits, but the sums so retained shall be reported to the executive officer in accordance with the regulations of the Commission. Subject to the withholding of any compensation so authorized, each officer or person selling licenses or permits shall, as soon as practicable after the first day of each month, transmit the proceeds from such sales, together with a report thereof, to the executive officer who shall keep accurate records of such proceeds and promptly deposit 50 percent thereof in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, and transmit 50 percent thereof to the treasurer of the Territory to be covered into the Territorial school fund. Receipts from all other sources shall be accounted for and disposed of in like manner.

"Subdivision L—Tags and seals: The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to adopt tags or seals of an approved type or design to be used for marking seized articles, and beaver and marten skins, or the skins of other fur or game animals when required by the regulations of the Secretary to be tagged or sealed, for purposes of identification and authentication.

"Subdivision M—Special regulations, permits, and licenses: In addition to the hunting, trapping, and fishing licenses or permits required by any other provision of this act, or by regulations authorized to be issued thereunder, the Commission may from time to time prescribe regulations requiring residents, nonresidents, and aliens to obtain special licenses, upon the payment of fees fixed by such regulations, prior to the taking of specified game animals in specified areas, and may by such regulations limit further the number, kind, and sex of such animals that may be taken in such areas, and also may restrict the number of persons who may hunt in each such area. Whenever such additional restrictions are imposed by regulation, the executive officer shall issue to qualified applicants, upon receipt of the proper application and fee, the special licenses repersons who may hunt in each such area. Whenever such additional restrictions are imposed by regulation, the executive officer shall issue to qualified applicants, upon receipt of the proper application and fee, the special licenses required by such regulations, in the number designated by the regulations and in the order of the receipt of applications.

"SEC. 11. Collectors of customs, duties of: That it shall be the duty of collectors of customs at ports of entry in the United States to keep accurate accounts of all consignments of game birds, game animals, skins of fur animals, game fishes, or parts thereof, and nests or eggs of game birds, received from or returned to the Territory, except when shipped for scientific, propagation, exhibition, or educational purposes under a permit issued by the Director pursuant to regulations of the Secretary; and it shall be the duty of all collectors of customs to enforce the provisions of regulations adopted pursuant to this act with respect to shipments of game birds, game animals, skins of fur animals, game fishes, or parts thereof, and nests or eggs of game birds.

"SEC. 12. Burden of proof: That the possession of any wild animal, game fish, wild bird, or part thereof, or any nest or egg of such bird, during the time when the taking of it is prohibited, shall, in any action in rem, constitute prima facie evidence that it was taken, possessed, bought, sold, or transported in violation of the provisions of this act, and the burden of proof shall be upon the possessor or claimant of it to overcome the presumption of illegal possession and to establish the fact that it was obtained and is possessed lawfully.

"SEC. 13. United States attorneys, duties of: That it shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the division in which any wild animal, game fish, wild bird, or part thereof, or any nest or egg of such bird, has been seized because taken, transported, bought, sold, or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act, or in which any gun, trap, net, fishing tackle, boat, dog, sled, aircraft, wagon, or other vehicle, or other paraphernalia has been seized because used in the unlawful taking of any wild animal, game fish, wild bird, or part thereof, or any nest or egg of such bird, or in which any sled, boat, aircraft, wagon, or other vehicle has been seized because used in the transportation of any wild animal, game fish, wild bird, or part thereof, or any nest or egg of such bird, illegally bought, sold, or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act, to institute an action in rem against it for the forfeiture thereof to the United States in any case in which the disposition of such article is not involved in a criminal prosecution. In case of judgment being rendered in favor of the United States, the wild birds, game fishes, wild animals, or other articles forfeited shall be disposed of as directed by the court having jurisdiction, and if sold, the proceeds of sale shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the executive officer to be disposed of as provided in subdivision K of section 10 of this act: Provided, That no action in rem shall be required with respect to any wild animal, game fish, wild bird, or part thereof, or any nest or egg of such bird, or any gun, net, fishing tackle, trap, or other device possessed or used in or in aid of a violation of this act and legally seized when the claimant thereof releases such article or articles to the United States by a voluntary release in writing witnessed by two disinterested parties, in which case such articles shall be disposed of by the executive officer and if sold the proceeds shall be disposed of as provided in this section.

"SEC. 14. Continuance of funds: That the unexpended balances of any sums appropriated by the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, for enforcing the provisions of the act of January 13, 1925, as amended, for the protection of game animals, fur animals, and birds in the Territory, are hereby made available for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act and regulations made pursuant hereto, and all contractual obligations heretofore incurred under the amended, shall remain in full force and effect.

"SEC. 15. Penalties: That unless a different or other penalty or punishment is hereby specifically prescribed, a person who violates any provision of this act or of any order or regulation adopted pursuant to this act, or who fails to perform any duty imposed by this act or by any order or regulation adopted pursuant to this act, is guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both; and, in addition thereto, any person convicted of a violation of any provision of this act who is the holder of any form of license issued hereunder shall thereupon forfeit said license and shall surrender it upon demand of any person authorized by the Commission to receive it, and upon a second conviction he shall not be entitled to, nor shall he be granted a license of such form for a period of 1 year from the date of such forfeiture, and upon a third or successive conviction for a period of 5 years from the date of such forfeiture; and any cooperative store operated exclusively by and for native Indians or Eskimos, or any store operated by missions exclusively for native Indians or Eskimos, without a license as provided in this act, upon a second or third conviction for violation of this act, shall not be entitled to engage in the business of dealing in furs for such time as the court before whom such conviction is had may decide: Provided, That such prohibition shall not be imposed for the first conviction, nor for a period in excess of 1 year from date of the second conviction, nor for a period in excess of 5 years from date of the third or any subsequent conviction; and all moneys from fines shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the executive officer to be disposed of as provided in subdivision K of section 10 of this act.

"Any licensed guide who shall fail or refuse to report promptly to the Commission any violation of this act of which he may have knowledge, shall be guilty of a violation of this act, and, in addition thereto, shall have his license revoked and shall be ineligible to act as a licensed guide for a period of 5 years from the time of his conviction therefor or of the establishment to the satisfaction of the Commission of definite proof of such offense.

"SEC. 16. Administration of oaths for purposes of prosecution: That such officers, agents, or employees of the Department of the Interior as may be designated in writing by the Secretary or executive officer for the purpose are hereby authorized and empowered to administer to or take from any person, an oath, affirmation, or affidavit whenever such oath, affirmation, or affidavit is for use in any prosecution or proceeding under or in the enforcement of this act.

"SEC. 17. Authorization of appropriations: That there is authorized to be appropriated, from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and to accomplish the purposes of this act and regulations made pursuant hereto, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized out of such moneys to employ in Alaska and elsewhere such persons and means as he may deem necessary for such purposes, including printing; purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of aircraft; construction of aircraft hangars and other structures; restocking depleted areas; emergency feeding of wildlife; investigation of wildlife and game-fish resources and conditions; and protection and rehabilitation of Territorial wildlife and game-fish resources.

"SEC. 18. Separability of provisions: That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or parts thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 19. Application to Mount McKinley National Park: That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as repealing or modifying in any manner section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1917 (39 Stat. 938), entitled 'An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park in the Territory of Alaska.'

"SEC. 20. Date effective: That this act shall become effective immediately upon its passage and approval, and shall be known by the short title of the 'Alaska Game Law.'"

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDING IMMIGRATION ACT OF FEBRUARY 5, 1917

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 12 on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 1761, to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917. I do so because we passed this over without prejudice at the request of the gentleman from Ohio, who wanted more facts in connection with the bill. He has received those facts, and is willing to withdraw any possible objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want an explanation of it from the gentleman from Illinois. However, Mr. Speaker, there is no use going any further, because I am going to object to raising the salary of this Commissioner of Immigration at this time. What we want is to have the immigration laws enforced.

Mr. MASON. I wish the gentleman would reserve his objection until he has had the explanation that he has asked.

Mr. RANKIN. Very well. I will reserve it for the explanation, but I am going to object.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the explanation of this bill is merely this: When there was a Commissioner of Naturalization and also a Commissioner of Immigration, each man received a definite salary. That salary in total amounted to $15,000 a year. At the time these two offices were combined and placed in charge of one man, the salary was fixed at $9,000, which is below the level of other heads of bureaus. Now, we have had difficulty in getting the type of man in charge of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, who would do the very thing that the gentleman from Mississippi wants—namely, a better enforcement of the laws of both naturalization and immigration. We now have one such man in prospect. That gentleman in order to accept the position gave up an income of twice as much as $10,000, and we think it is only proper and right, in order to get that caliber of man that we have been wanting for some time, to place him on a par with the other heads of bureaus and grant him $10,000. That is the explanation of the bill, and I will guarantee it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman give me this gentleman's name and address so that I may check up on him? I am a little skeptical about loading up these bureaus and making them any more topheavy than they are now.

Mr. MASON. We are not loading them up. This position is vacant at the present time, and this man was selected because of his outstanding qualifications.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that I have figured it out exactly. We have a great many disabled veterans who are coming back from abroad, who have been injured in this war, and I think we can get plenty of them to take this job at the present salary; and if you will let it stand as it is for a short time, we will get some of these men who have been on Guadalcanal, or in north Africa, or in Europe, fighting the battles of our country, and I am sure that we can get a real, outstanding American among them to take this position at the salary now provided.

Mr. MASON. But the question, of course, is whether the fact that they have fought in Guadalcanal, or other places on the globe, qualifies them for a highly technical position.

Mr. RANKIN. And I will say to the gentleman that there are some who have disqualifications that we have not been able to get rid of.

Mr. MASON. We have gotten rid of some of these who have disqualifications.

Mr. RANKIN. Not all of them. I have in mind now a man that I understand the gentleman's committee was unable to get off the pay roll, though they proved that he had been connected with 21 subversive organizations. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The status of the bill at the present time is that it has already gone over with prejudice. The gentleman from Mississippi has given evidence of what his action will be today. I have looked into this bill, and I join with my friend from Illinois in hoping that the bill will pass. What I suggest is that the unanimous consent request be not pressed, and I am going to ask my friend from Mississippi to personally look into the matter between now and next consent day, and I am satisfied that upon examination of the merits, he will not object, and I hope he will not.

Mr. MASON. I wish to thank the gentleman for that suggestion, and with the understanding that the gentleman will look into this matter thoroughly before the next call of the Consent Calendar, I will withdraw the request at this time.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUPPLIES FOR MARTINIQUE

Mr. MORRISON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, there has come to my attention a matter which I think is of vital importance to the people, not only of America, but all the people of the United Nations. It is high time for America to stop any and all appeasement of the Laval-Vichy government in any manner, shape, or form, by direct or indirect aid.

It so happens that this very moment there is a boat by the name of Guadaloupe loaded with food and supplies at New Orleans, which was supposed to sail 1 week ago to Martinique. However, the seamen on this boat have struck and have declared themselves pro-Americans and refused to take any more food or supplies to Martinique as long as Admiral Robert, Chief of Martinique, maintains his pro-Vichy attitude. As a matter of fact, the United States is shipping to Martinique each month from $800,000 to $1,000,000 worth of food and supplies.

This chief ruler of Martinique has refused to cooperate in any manner with America and the United Nations. As a matter of fact, the people of Martinique are pro-American and the only reason they are not revolting is that food and supplies are being shipped from the United States. It so happens that at Martinique at this very minute, under the control of Admiral Robert there is a French airplane carrier Berne, two cruisers, six oil tankers, which we need desperately at this time, two big merchant ships, and many small vessels. The United Nations could use these to a great advantage if they were turned over to them, but Robert has point-blank refused. Not only that, it has come to my knowledge that over 30,000,000,000 gold francs, which is approximately $650,000,000, that should have been turned over to the United States long ago, are being held by Admiral Robert, and many suspicion that part of that gold is being sent to Vichy, France, direct to Laval. Not only that, but General Giraud's private envoy has been cooling his heels in Puerto Rico because Admiral Robert would not let him come to Martinique as requested by General Giraud himself. It is my understanding that it was decided at the Casablanca conference that General Giraud's special envoy would be sent to Martinique to see if certain matters could be ironed out and settled with Admiral Robert.

We all realize that the true French people of France and the other French people in other parts of the world are pro-American—those gallant patriotic Free French souls still manifest that same burning patriotism that Lafayette brought to America—but under the leadership of men like Robert and Laval they are seriously being prevented from helping the cause of the United Nations.

The irony of the whole thing is that we are protecting Admiral Robert from a revolution and keeping him in charge of Martinique by giving him this food monthly, which the American people themselves need at this moment.

Two months prior to Pearl Harbor the Navy decided to take over Martinique. The Navy, so I am informed, went so far as to place the Marines on the ships for the specific purpose of occupying Martinique and it is my understanding that the Navy would have occupied Martinique if it had not been for the State Department, who turned thumbs down. This is a serious matter and I wish to call this matter to the attention of the State Department, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Commander in Chief of our armed forces.

AUTHORIZING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS TO INVESTIGATE PROGRESS OF DEFENSE-HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 121.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to conduct an investigation of the progress of the defense-housing program, with a view to determining whether such program is being carried forward efficiently, expeditiously, and economically, and with a view to determining whether the authorization of additional appropriations for defense housing purposes is necessary.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation, or otherwise, as the committee deems desirable.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, later on I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution gives the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorization to make further investigation as to conditions surrounding housing projects for which we have appropriated millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, unlike other committees, has expended only a small amount of money, approximately $4,000. I feel it will make such investigations as will show or bring to light whether any unnecessary housing has been erected, or whether favoritism has been shown to any States or districts.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen, we have already passed 10 or 11 resolutions authorizing investigations by 5 or 6 standing committees of the House and have also created 3 or 4 special committees, but I think of all we have authorized, the present one asked for is not only fully justified but is by far the most urgently needed.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Ramspeck resolution and the Cannon resolutions giving the Committee on Appropriations subpena power, which I supported, will render valuable service. While the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs have been given the same power as accorded them last year, I hope they will now penetrate matters further than they have heretofore. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has been given special investigating authority and it should dig deep into certain contracts that were awarded.

I did not oppose the Cox resolution to investigate the Federal Communications Commission, but opposed the creation of the committee provided in the Smith resolution and also what I deemed the unnecessary continuation of the Dies committee. I am not going to call attention to certain minor investigating resolutions which I have favored, but in supporting the resolution before us I express the hope that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will obtain facts and information that will be beneficial from every point of view. Only this morning a large delegation headed by our amiable and hard-working former colleague, Hon. Edward A. Kelly, acting in behalf of the Mayor of the city of Chicago, appealed to me to assist them in having an assignment of housing allocations sanctioned to take care of approximately 20,000 families. The committee claims that other States and cities have received priorities which are being withheld from Chicago.

The shortage of housing became acute in Chicago when the War Department recognized the advantages which would inure in placing war orders in the city of greatest diversified manufacture in the United States, due, principally, to its central location and transportation advantages. Besides the plants that have been constructed within the city of Chicago, several have been built and are in the course of construction outside the city limits of Chicago. The people employed in the latter prefer to live in Chicago, having as it does, many conveniences and recreational facilities, which could only be provided in a limited way on a new project or in a mushroom community. They have found a splendid city administration under Mayor Edward J. Kelly, who just last Tuesday was again renominated for mayor, receiving 114,000 more votes than the other two Democratic and three Republican candidates combined, and a 350,000-vote majority above the highest Republican candidate.

In view of that, I feel that the Republicans can save themselves unnecessary work if they will join in making the election of our splendid mayor unanimous. I think it will be much in the interest of their own party as well as in the interest of the city of Chicago.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. I am very glad the gentleman made the correction. The election is not over yet. That was just the primary.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, it is nearly over, because when people vote 4 to 1 for a man they approve, in this instance, not only his splendid administration but they also plainly and overwhelmingly recognize his stanch support of our President in our great war effort the past 4 years. I know that the good people of Chicago, when it comes to the election, will vote to continue him in office by even a still greater majority than he received in the primaries.

Mr. Speaker, that is all I wish to say at this time, but I ask unanimous consent to have the privilege of inserting in the RECORD the names of some of the Republicans holding important positions in some of the executive agencies, who, unfortunately, the Republicans characterize as crackpots.

I am inserting the names of just a few who come to mind, namely, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, and his assistants, Mr. Forrestal and Mr. Bard; the Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson; the Under Secretary, Judge Patterson, and several assistants under him; Mr. Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board and, I believe his assistants, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Batt; Mr. E. R. Stettinius, Administrator of the Lend-Lease Administration; Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, and others.

I think the Republican gentlemen would desist from assailing these men holding leading positions in the Government as crackpots, because, as I understand, 90 percent of them, unfortunately for this administration, are Republicans; some of them high in the Republican Party. Naturally, the President appointed them to these high positions in the hope that they would be of great service to the country and bring about economy and efficiency in their respective branches, and also stimulate the production of materials to meet our war needs.

As I stated to the President, and say to you gentlemen now, this matter of appointments is one on which I have differed with the President. I think if he had put in some good, aggressive, economically minded Democrats, there would not have been so much criticism of the so-called crackpots and bureaucrats which we hear about so much today from the Republicans, and even from a few misguided Democrats on our side.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, after yielding 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PACE). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to include in his remarks certain extraneous matter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unique occasion in the history of the House of Representatives as the heavens are about to fall, because for the first time in the 35 years the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee has admitted in the House that a Republican had done something good.

Mr. SABATH. No; the gentleman misunderstood me; I did not admit that.

Mr. FISH. He had to go back of course quite a way, at least 75 years, but he said that Secretary Seward did the right thing in buying Alaska. That is at least a partial concession.

Mr. SABATH. There is no question about that.

Mr. FISH. I was very much interested in listening to his swan song over the Kelly-Nash regime in Chicago. I understand that finally all elements have got together in Chicago and have determined to oust Mayor Kelly on April 6. The representative of that great machine here in the House must of course deliver a swan song in advance and present all the alibis.

So far as the rule is concerned, I believe there is no opposition to it; it merely makes in order a bill extending the time of the committee to investigate national defense housing areas and find out if anything should be done in those defense areas. I was also very interested to learn about the conditions in Chicago. I thought Chicago had grabbed almost everything under the New Deal and had all the housing and national defense housing which was needed for Chicago and probably for five or six other cities as well. The gentleman from Illinois has been very jealous of Chicago; we find that the chairman of the Rules Committee through his great power and influence has seen to it that the national defense housing of Chicago was just 100-percent-plus.

If the Speaker will permit me, coming from a small district up the Hudson River, to say a few words about my own district, I would appreciate it. I thought I had accomplished a great deal last summer just before the primary election—and we had a primary election up our way last year. Some of the people in the city of Newburgh wanted to get priorities in order to repair certain houses and build two-family houses and increase the available space for the manpower that had moved in to Stewart Airfield, and two or three shipyards. So finally we got action and the National Housing Agency gave us priorities, but whether it was because I was elected or not I find that within the last few days these priorities have been taken away and all this effort has gone for naught. Naturally I am taking the floor today to urge the continuation of the powers of the permanent Committee to Investigate National Housing Conditions not only in Chicago but also in the city of Newburgh. I am calling the attention of the chairman of that committee, my very good friend with whom I have served so many years and for whom I have such great admiration, to ask him if he will do something to see that the city of Newburgh gets a little help. I would remind him that Newburgh was Washington's headquarters during the Revolutionary War for 2 years and was the cradle of liberty long before the Nash-Kelly regime was ever known in Chicago. I would like him, if he would, to kindly look into the housing situation in Newburgh, and see if something cannot be done to restore the priorities there so that we can build at least a few two-party houses and rehabilitate the old houses to take care of the personnel of Stewart Airfield and the men in the shipyards.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Everybody knows of the prominent part Newburgh played in the early history of our country which led into our constitutional government, but I noticed with a great deal of interest the gentleman's statement that Newburgh was the Cradle of Liberty. There is no question but it played an important part in the development, but I always had the impression that Faneuil Hall was the Cradle of Liberty.

Mr. FISH. That is the trouble with you people from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; just because you were fortunate enough to have some eminent historians you have assumed a monopoly of the entire history of the United States. It is true that some patriots shot their guns at the British at Lexington and Concord and those shots resounded around the world at that time. Yet there is no reason why these shots should keep on reverberating to the historical discrimination of the other 12 Colonies or States which were also in the Revolutionary War as was the great State of New York for 7 long weary years.

Mr. McCORMACK. I paid tribute to Newburgh. I just want to save my friend from himself. Sometimes a friend is a real friend when he saves another friend from himself. Unless the gentleman from New York wants to have another revolutionary war engaged in through the press he had better revise his remarks when he said there were a few guns fired off at Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill.

Mr. FISH. I hope to see the day when American history is rewritten so that all the other 12 Colonies so-called at that time are brought into the revolutionary picture and are not completely dominated and monopolized by Massachusetts. Of course, we know about the Boston Tea Party and Lexington. We have heard about Paul Revere's ride. We want to tell you, though, that the Battle of Saratoga, the most decisive battle in the whole war, was fought in the State of New York. We want you to know that Washington had his headquarters at Newburgh for over 2 years. He did not have his headquarters in Massachusetts for more than 6 months during the Revolutionary War. Even Pennsylvania was in the war. They want to be heard too.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Has the gentleman ever heard of Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell?

Mr. FISH. I think that they were overlooked by the historians from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield tc the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN. May I add that the only reason why Ohio did not win the Revolutionary War was because there was no Ohio at that time, or it would have won the war.

Mr. FISH. I yield now to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROLPH. If California had been in the Union as one of the Colonies, I am sure California would have taken the lead.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, unconsciously and unintentionally by reverse action the gentleman is paying the greatest tribute to Massachusetts that I have ever heard. However, I want to join with my friend from New York in his insistence that the contributions of New York during the Revolutionary War be properly recognized. There is one thing about Massachusetts, we are always willing to entertain a condescending state of mind toward New York.

Mr. FISH. I agree with that. I am going to speak in the gentleman's district in Boston on the 17th of March on Evacuation Day. I realize when I go up there to the Hub of Culture and Higher Learning that we from New York are handicapped. Nevertheless, my complaint is, and has been for a long time, that most of the fighting was done in New York and most of the talking and history writing was done in Massachusetts.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I think Illinois ought to have something to say about its contribution to the Revolutionary War.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman stated that General Washington's headquarters were in New York.

Mr. FISH. No. I said in Newburgh, N. Y., in my congressional district and where I now reside.

Mr. SABATH. For 2 years. Does not the gentleman think that if the people at that time had supported Washington and not opposed him, the same as they are opposing Roosevelt now, he could have secured liberty and freedom for this country long before and it would not have been necessary for him to suffer these 2 long years?

Mr. FISH. I do not know whether that is a personal remark or not, but may I say to the gentleman that my great-grandfather, Nicholas Fish, was a colonel of infantry in Washington's army at Newburgh at that time.

Mr. SABATH. Congratulations.

Mr. FISH. Giving his full support to our armed forces and victory, as all of us on the minority side are doing at the present time. I would also remind the gentleman from Illinois that George Washington turned down an offer of a crown at Newburgh and later refused a third term, which example might well have been copied by the occupant of the White House.

Having won or lost the historical fight for New York—I do not know which—I want to go back to the resolution before us and ask the chairman if he will not use his influence so that the people of Newburgh may get priorities for building these two-party houses so badly needed for defense purposes.

Mr. LANHAM. Insofar as I personally am concerned, I am quite willing to follow anywhere where George Washington has lived.

Mr. FISH. That is all I am asking for and feel confident that the results will be constructive.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], chairman of the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, after this splendid, patriotic verbal detour into the mysteries of history, when Paul Revere has ridden again, when once more the embattled farmers at Concord have fired the shot heard around the world, and Washington has revisited Newburgh, N. Y., may I take just a moment or two of your time to explain the pending resolution.

In the last Congress a resolution identical with this one in its terms and provision was passed and under it an appropriation through the Committee on Accounts was made of $10,000. The committee spent a little less than $4,000 of that amount in making this investigation. It was much more economical to make it in the last Congress than it will be in this Congress, by reason of certain advantages that we had formerly in the matter of transportation.

I think as much was accomplished for the good of the country in the small sum that was expended under that resolution as by any comparable amount spent in the history of this Congress. It is contemplated that under the funds which we hope to have allocated to the committee for this purpose under the pending resolution similar good results can be obtained.

May I say that all the committee will ask after the adoption of this resolution will be that it be permitted to expend in a similar investigation the amount remaining of the $10,000 allotted to the committee in the last Congress. In other words, we are not asking for 1 penny in addition to that which has heretofore been authorized; but, in view of the fact that this is a new Congress, a new resolution is required and new action by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives to authorize the expenditure of the unused portion of that former allotment.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I wonder if the gentleman can tell the House what percentage of the contracts now let under this defense-housing program are let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. LANHAM. Unfortunately, I do not have that detailed information at hand at the present moment. Of course, that information could be given by the Administrator of the National Housing Agency, Mr. John B. Blandford, Jr., who has supervision of all public houses in the United States.

May I say concerning this particular measure that it has no reference to the F. H. A., but simply to the emergency housing for defense purposes in congested areas for the industrial workers who are moved into these areas and where housing is not available and where private capital cannot run the risk of doing this temporary construction. If this law is properly administered, it is the purpose that this money, insofar as possible, shall be recouped and returned to the Treasury when the emergency is over. It has nothing to do with slum clearance or subsidized housing for low-income groups but is purely a defense measure for the emergency to take care of the industrial workers and those officers of the Army and Navy assigned to the various plants, shipbuilding, munitions, and plane plants, where housing is not available and cannot otherwise be provided.

Mr. JENSEN. The reason I asked the question is that when the last appropriation for defense housing was before the House I offered an amendment which required that all contracts should be let to the lowest responsible bidder. The gentleman from Texas saw fit to oppose that amendment, if he recalls.

Mr. LANHAM. I do. Of course, I recall also the reasons.

Mr. JENSEN. I am thinking that if that amendment had gone through it might not be necessary to have this investigation.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to my friend that I think this investigation would be quite necessary even under those circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. There has been a great deal of speed necessary in much of this housing in order to have the essential materials and munitions of war for our fighting forces. There would have been in some cases unfortunate delay incident to advertising for bids. I know that several of these contracts were negotiated, others awarded under competitive bidding. However, I may say that if this law is administered in accordance with the terms and provisions of the act, it will accomplish a wonderful purpose. No man on the committee or in this House will have cause to be ashamed of it. Our object is to follow up as closely as we can, with the multiplicity of our duties, the administration of this law, to effect the necessary economy, and to prevent the diversion of any of the funds to purposes for which it has never been intended.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking member of the committee.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. May I say in connection with the contracts that I have watched the Federal Register very closely for months, and universally in that Register the little Housing Administration is advertising for bids to be received on a certain date.

Mr. JENSEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. LANHAM. I know that has happened in many instances; but I cannot give the gentleman the percentage.

Mr. JENSEN. The reason I say I am happy to hear the gentleman make that statement is that our able chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] promised and assured us when this appropriation was before the Congress that that would be insisted upon.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; to the greatest possible extent; and we have done that.

Mr. JENSEN. I hope the committee continues to insist that these contracts be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. LANHAM. We insist upon that in every case where it is possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my 1-minute speech on Captain Rickenbacker be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS TO INVESTIGATE PROGRESS OF THE DEFENSE-HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROLPH].

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to compliment the gentleman from Illinois and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules on reporting out the rule providing for the consideration of this bill. May I ask the chairman and the members of that committee if they will not set a hearing on my bill for rent control, which is along the same lines as this housing bill? I have received communications from all over the country expressing great interest in the investigation of rent control, and I sincerely hope the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will grant me a hearing on my bill so that the Committee on Banking and Currency, where the price-control and rent-control bills originated, may be authorized to investigate this very vexatious problem of rent control.

Mr. SABATH. Answering the gentleman, may I state that so far we have already reported out and acted upon 11 resolutions providing for investigations. I have pending before me now about 42 or 43 other resolutions to investigate and to create committees and, in addition, have many requests for rules on important bills, so with the best of intentions I cannot take up all these things immediately. However, as soon as conditions will permit, the gentleman will be given a hearing.

Mr. ROLPH. I recognize very definitely the great burdens under which the Committee on Rules labors, but the Committee on Banking and Currency really has nothing to do at the present time except wait for this rule to come out. We have no legislation pending before our committee. The question of rent control is of paramount importance. I believe that if the committee will give me a hearing on that resolution, it will report it out.

Mr. SABATH. The Committee on Banking and Currency has a bill pending and has asked for a rule on it. Unfortunately, I have not been able to give the committee a hearing on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Nebraska to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by a prominent banker of my district before the special Senate committee to study the problem of small business enterprises.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is my purpose to ask one or two questions in respect to the resolution. I note that the resolution states that its purpose is to make possible an investigation with a view to determining whether the authorization of additional appropriations for defense housing is necessary. As the gentleman perhaps knows, we went into that somewhat in the recent hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill. There was a conviction on the part of some members of the subcommittee that there is some uncertainty in respect to the merits of additional appropriations. So I hope the resolution is adopted, but I should like to ask the distinguished chairman a question. In his remarks he said it was an attempt to determine whether or not the appropriations were being expended according to the purposes of the basic law. What is the opinion of the gentleman's committee with respect to the purpose of the basic law? Is it to encourage privately financed housing or publicly financed housing? In other words, does the committee favor private construction through the F. H. A., or public-defense housing?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that my friend has asked that question. Of course, this particular law has nothing to do with the F. H. A. It has to do with emergency housing of industrial workers who are brought into localities where these various plants are established.

Mr. CASE. It has to do with F. H. A. in this respect, that both forms of housing are administered under the National Housing Agency and that if private financing with F. H. A. insurance does the job, it is not necessary to appropriate money from the Treasury for defense housing projects.

Mr. LANHAM. I was coming to the other part of the gentleman's question. We have tried to the extent of our ability and power to encourage and give preference to building by private industry. We have insisted on that in the hearings and we have had assurance from the War Production Board witnesses who have appeared before us that they would give the same priorities to private concerns that wish to put up this housing that they would give to public agencies. Our principal interest, of course, is in private housing, and we have so hedged this law with such restrictions. The act is purely an emergency measure and no public housing is supposed to be built under it in these localities where the plants are stationed except such housing as is not available otherwise through private construction or buildings already in those localities. After the emergency it is all to be sold or salvaged, and the money returned to the Treasury. In other words, it is purely legislation with reference to the war emergency to meet a condition that exists by reason of the congested areas where these workers have been assigned. We do not want them to become a financial burden on the communities where they have been taken and consequently we make provision that part of the rents shall be used in paying taxes to those communities, and when the emergency is over, then we are to recoup for the Treasury all we can by sale and salvage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. CASE. I am very glad that the gentleman has made that statement and that the chairman has made clear his position and the intent of the committee with regard to the financing of housing projects. These things are joined in the National Housing Agency in the person of the Commissioner and in the administration of the Agency.

The question arose in our hearings as to whether the intent is to encourage privately financed F. H. A.-insured housing or public housing with Treasury funds. I am glad to say the statement by the Commissioner was the same as that given by the gentleman from Texas. Some Members, however, have been told that private builders find difficulty in getting priorities while the public housing projects sail right along.

Mr. LANHAM. I know they have, and we have insisted on private building wherever possible, and the committee has had assurance from the War Production Board representatives that they would give exactly the same priority.

Some persons have expressed another fear with reference to this legislation in the nature of a suspicion that in some of the agencies there are those who wish to divert some of these funds from such emergency construction into socialized housing after the war is over. They do not make such accusation against the administrators in charge, and I do not think such an accusation against them could justly be made, but they are suspicious of the purposes of some of the personnel. Naturally, we should like to know about that and do our best to keep the administration of this act true to the legislative intent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of course, we know from experience that this matter of public housing and the lack of transportation facilities has had a great deal to do with the troublesome problem of absenteeism in war industries. I would like to cite an example. We have a large ordnance plant in my district. Federal housing agencies built several hundred houses in that general area. Some of them are dormitories, some 15 miles from the plant. The problem of transportation has since entered the picture and today those houses are occupied to a small extent only. They have never been fully occupied. Many of them were never occupied. Is it the intention of the committee that its inquiry may go so far as to look into the kindred question of transportation, to inquire why many units already built have never been occupied?

Mr. LANHAM. I will say that the committee has looked into that general subject. We have the assurance of the administrative authorities that the housing will now be built within a radius of 2 miles from the plant—not more than 2 miles—which is walking distance for the workers. Not being the administrator, of course I cannot give the gentleman any definite and detailed information about any particular project, except upon inquiry of the administrative authorities.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Of course, these units of which I speak are already built. They have been standing idle for months.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand. Of, course, transportation facilities were much more available at that time. I do not know to what particular project the gentleman is referring, and would not have all the detailed information with reference to it. That would have to be secured through the Administrator.

But the purpose of this resolution is to enable us to look into those features, in order that we may not be wasting money, in order that we may not have undue vacancies, and to see that this law may be administered in accordance with its intent and provisions as economically as possible.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. I will be glad to give the gentleman the data and the names and places, if the committee would look into this particular problem.

Mr. LANHAM. I would appreciate that. I would also suggest to the gentleman that he inquire of the administrator who has charge of all this housing, just why certain conditions exist of which he has complained.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. POULSON.]

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said on this floor concerning the food problem, and the shortage of manpower on the farm, and heretofore practically all the speakers have been from agricultural districts. I am speaking as one who represents a metropolitan district, or what might be termed strictly the consumers.

I am interested in this simply because it is my people who will have to suffer because of this inevitable shortage of food.

The Secretary of Agriculture and other administrative officials have recognized the present shortage by introducing what we call the rationing system, but I sincerely question whether they realize the extent of the shortage, which we are bound to have in the future. A letter was sent out by the Agricultural Adjustment Agency, dated January 29, 1943, in which is stated:

> Reports reaching me from the field indicate that morale is high, and weather permitting, western farmers and ranchers will hang up some new production records in 1943.

I challenge these statements, because I have also with me a letter, which I am going to insert into the RECORD, from one of the large farmers of California.

The loss or the reduction in production for this one farm in tomatoes alone between 1942 and 1943, calculated on the point system established by the O. P. A., will equal the total amount of points allowed every man, woman, and child in my district for 2 months.

Now, these figures may sound startling, but those are some of the facts that we must face, and it is high time we are getting off our high horse, quit talking in generalities, and get down to brass tacks. These are the figures:

In 1942 this farmer raised 225 acres of tomatoes. He sold from that acreage 2,300 tons of No. 1 tomatoes. In addition to that 2,300 tons, he lost between 700 and 1,000 tons of No. 1 tomatoes in the field because of the lack of help to market them. This acreage averages approximately 15 tons per acre. Now, this year he is only going to plant 40 acres in tomatoes, or a reduction of 185 acres. Not even taking into consideration the 850 tons which he lost, but only calculating the 2,300 tons which he sold, and subtracting from it the 600 tons which he should produce this year, leaves a difference of 1,700 tons between the amount to be sold this year and the amount sold last year.

The Department of Agriculture figures show that these tomatoes will conservatively net 786 No. 2 cans per ton. One thousand seven hundred tons will equal 1,336,200 No. 2 cans, which is the reduction in tomatoes by 1 farmer alone. On the basis established by O. P. A. of 16 points per can of No. 2 tomatoes, this would show that this amount of cans would consume the total rationing points of 445,400 people for 1 month. I have an excess of 229,000 people in my district, so I say it would consume practically the 2-month quota of my constituents.

The reason that this farmer did not receive sufficient help in 1942 certainly was not because of poor wages. He hired men, women, and children, and the average season wage amounted to $8.60 per day. Bear in mind that a great many of these were Mexicans and could not earn that much money in any other line of endeavor.

This same farmer operates a 90-acre orchard of apricots, and the Government claims more apricots are needed than tomatoes. Last year he estimated that 150 tons of this fruit were lost because of insufficient help, and his average cost to the pickers was $10 per day, including men, women, and children. I have with me pictures of this apricot orchard showing the fruit which has fallen to the ground when overripe and not picked in time. These apricots sold for $67.50 per ton, showing a loss to the producers of $10,000. We, the consumers, are paying for this loss through our food shortage.

This farmer is not asking for higher prices, he is asking for help, manpower, and he has offered in his letter several practical suggestions. I know that the farmers in California have been offered verbal assistance on the importation of farm help, but to date there has been no visible means of substantiating the Government's promise, because the first thing the Government does is, not to get the help to take care of the crop and save this food for a nation, but as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] stated in his speech last week, it sends out its theorists with all of their socialized ideas attempting to put in a social system first, and then after that has been established, it attempts to bring in the needed help. We are at war. We need this food both for our soldiers, our allies, and our civilians. To these men, who are more interested in the social system than the results, I want to say, let us produce the food, win the war, and then argue over the social system after the war is won. Remember the law of supply and demand will necessitate the farmers paying sufficient wages.

Along with this point, I again ask the Department of Agriculture to be specific and show me who are the farmers, who are going to overcome the shortage, which I have substantiated.

While I realize that this is just one farmer, and these figures are very small compared with those of the entire United States, yet, it is an example of what is happening throughout America today.

I am inserting here the letter from Mr. Thorpe, who is one of the large farmers in California, and who has covered this subject in a most comprehensive fashion. He has offered some very constructive remedies:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., February 17, 1943.

DEAR MR. POULSON: This replies to your February 12 inquiry concerning certain of my last season's farming operations.

Among other properties, I own and operated a 225-acre patch of tomatoes in the Salinas Valley, Monterey County, Calif., also a 160-acre walnut orchard, and a 90-acre apricot orchard in the same county.

On my tomato deal I used a crew of about 50 Mexicans for planting. At the end of each week during the planting season this gang struck for an additional pay raise of 5 cents an hour. In each case it had to be granted as no other planting labor was available. The job took 7 weeks, so the boys got 30 cents an hour more at the finish than at the start, for an average of 15-cents-an-hour increase from the start to the finish, so that my average planting cost was $67.50 a day more than anticipated.

These tomatoes were twice fertilized and were dusted by airplane; were several times irrigated and several times hoed for weeds, with all such operations running at much higher costs than ever before, but I produced a bounteous crop of 15 tons per acre of fine-quality tomatoes. Indeed, not a load was rejected by the canner and in all cases my percentage of culls was far below the tolerance as shown by State inspector reports.

I obtained a crew averaging about 50 tomato pickers, mostly Mexican women and children, about 25-percent Mexican men. This crew was not adequate to handle the harvest and they soon got behind. But try as I would, and did, by scouring the country from all sources, including the working of every man, woman, and child living on my farm, even my superintendent's wife and children, it was impossible to secure sufficient pickers to harvest the crop as it ripened, with the result that some of the fields could only be picked over once, many of them twice, although tomatoes should be picked over four or five times during the canning season for only thoroughly red-ripened, firm tomatoes are acceptable to the cannery and they do not all ripen at once.

The pickers worked on a contract basis of 16 cents per box. This was later raised to 18 cents. On this basis the men, women, and children engaged in this work from the start to the finish of the season averaged $8.60 per day. Hence, it will be realized that the pay was plenty high but sufficient available labor was just unobtainable.

As a result I delivered 2,300 tons to the cannery and actually lost, due entirely to unavailability of pickers, between 700 and 1,000 tons of beautiful, sound, first-class tomatoes. This loss was occasioned over approximately a 30-day period when the maturity was at its height. The tomatoes simply became overripe and then rotted on the vines.

The net result was that my tomato operations, not figuring interest on the investment, depreciation on farming equipment, including a very heavy depreciation on the trucks I used to haul the tomatoes from the field to the roadside, netted me $3,000. The depreciation on my equipment, irrigation system, etc., plus taxes on the land, are considerably more than $3,000. Hence, I took a substantial loss on the operation whereas a nice profit would have been obtainable had there been available sufficient harvesting labor.

A further result of this experience is that my tomato acreage for this season is reduced to 40 acres because it seems apparent that harvesting labor will be much scarcer this year than it was last and I cannot afford to take the chance of losing my shirt by producing a large, expensive crop which cannot be harvested.

Our Government claims they need apricots even more than they need tomatoes. I had a similar experience on my apricot deal last year. Fully 25 percent of my crop dropped to the ground and rotted there simply because it was impossible to obtain the necessary harvesting labor though the pickers were averaging $10 a day and they were mostly men, women, and children, about 60 percent Mexicans. This fruit was sold for $67.50 a ton to the canner, which is a comparatively high and reasonably profitable price, so naturally every possible effort was made to obtain pickers, still an insufficient number were available hence the fruit rotted on the ground and at least 150 tons of first-class fruit were lost on this 90 acres. A couple of photographs of this apricot loss are attached. For your information I may advise that apricots must be picked from the trees before they become overripe. When they drop to the ground they are worthless.

In my walnut operations a similiar situation occurred. Fully 15 percent of that crop was lost due to a shortage of harvesting labor. Walnuts carry perhaps the highest nonconcentrated food value of any natural product—3,280 calories per pound of kernels, and 3,200 calories is about an average daily food ration for an adult.

As a result of last season's experiences I personally know of dozens of farmers who are greatly contracting or completely eliminating their operations in crops which they have ordinarily grown and which entail a substantial amount of labor per acre or per ton These are usually the crops that are most urgently needed by our Government for Army, lend-lease, as well as for civilian requirements.

The principal reason behind these curtailments is that our farmers are convinced that the harvesting labor situation will be very much worse this summer and fall than it was last year. They cannot afford to plant and care for these crops which are expensive to grow if they cannot get them harvested.

Most of these crops which entail considerable labor per acre or per ton are what we term heavy-tonnage crops—that is, they will produce from 10 to 25 tons per acre, whereas the crops the farmers are diverting to, which require little labor per ton or per acre, are comparatively light-tonnage crops such as grain, hay, beans, and peas, some of which are already in serious oversupply and others are in and will continue to be in ample supply regardless. However, such crops produce only from a ton to 2 tons to the acre, hence when diversion of this kind occurs the loss in tonnage of food produced is about 90 percent.

Of course, California farmers growing orchard crops simply cannot divert their orchard crops to other crops requiring less labor for the reason that in most cases these farmers have more money invested in their trees and orchard development and equipment than they have in their land. It has taken them from 5 to 12 years from planting to get their orchards into production, so they must stay with these crops. Such items as apricots, peaches, prunes, raisins, apples, nuts, and pears are what the country needs most and what they are the shortest of. While these orchardists cannot switch to other production, still, due to the current labor shortage, they cannot perform the work that is necessary to produce normal quantity and quality.

For instance, trees must be pruned, sprayed, fertilized, and several times irrigated and cultivated, the fruit on most of them thinned each year.

At present, fertilizer is practically unobtainable; experienced pruners are generally unobtainable, so many farmers are not pruning this year. Those who are find it necessary to break in inexperienced, inefficient help at very high wages if such are at all obtainable. The result is that what pruning is being done is not being efficiently done and the cost per acre is at least four times normal. The fruit thinning in the spring, which usually costs $15 an acre, will cost at least $50 where help can be obtained for it, but probably half the orchards or more will not be thinned. Many will not be sprayed and few will be fertilized. The result is certain to be a substantial shortage in the quantity of fruit and nuts produced, but unless a very material increase in harvesting labor supply is available this summer and fall, much of such fruit and nuts as are produced will rot on the ground for lack of harvesting labor.

I realize it's almost impossible for the layman to believe that a farmer will spend a year producing a crop and then let it go to waste. Certainly the farmer does not intend that this shall happen, so when the harvest season is at hand he spends most of his time rustling around scouring the country for harvesting hands, but as every other farmer is doing the same thing and the harvesting hands are not available, he has no alternative but to let a good portion of his crop go to waste.

Again, most laymen think that a man operating a so-called family-size farm can perform practically all the labor with himself and family. But what is a family-size farm? Certainly a man can hardly be expected to make a living on an apricot orchard, say, of less than 20 acres. Well, it takes 80 workers to harvest and dry a 7½-ton-per-acre crop of apricots from a 20-acre orchard. I have produced 12 tons per acre on my farm and expect 10 tons per acre this year. But this 20-acre grower can't expect to have a family of 80, so he must have extra help during the harvesting period, else his crop goes to waste. The same situation prevails in most of our other orchard crops

Now, Mr. POULSON, there is only one solution to the problem. If the Government wants these vegetable, fruit, and nut crops salvaged, they will have to import a minimum of 60,000 Mexicans and get them coming promptly so that the full 60,000 will be available not later than the 1st of July. Then, in addition, they will have to grant 60- to 90-day furloughs to men in the armed forces who have had previous agricultural experience and who are stationed in the continental United States. The Mexicans could be used on the smaller farms and the soldiers stationed in larger units on the larger farms.

For instance, one farm which I manage employs about 1,000 people in the harvesting campaign from July 1 to November 1. Here in California there are many farms which use from 100 to 5,000 people during the harvesting season. I understand that practically all European belligerents follow this system of releasing men from the armed forces for necessary agricultural harvests.

Certainly we must avail ourselves of the maximum available Mexican labor and the services of experienced Army men, else we will surely starve in this land of plenty. And, believe me, the public is going to blame nobody but the administration if such a situation is permitted to occur.

I am writing my canner for figures as to the number of cans and cases of various products which are packed per ton and will give you this in a separate letter in a few days.

And now, Mister, anything you can do toward insuring a reasonable supply of Mexican labor and obtaining temporary furloughs for the military trainees will certainly be deeply appreciated by all California farmers and surely should be by the consuming public who are the ones who will suffer most from the very severe food shortages that are certain to occur if these two steps are not promptly taken.

Sincerely,

C. THORPE,
California Walnut Growers' Association.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of this resolution.

About 2 weeks ago I was in Indiana and I visited one of our defense industries. I believe it is the largest naval depot in the world, known as the Burns City naval depot. The commandant of that defense project took me out to see some defense housing. He also gave me some pictures of the houses being built near that particular place. I have some of those pictures and would like the members of the committee to look them over.

These houses were started a year ago in June and they have not all been completed, but two of those that were completed have already blown down, and before occupancy. I have pictures of those houses that were destroyed and by just an ordinary windstorm.

The captain further informed me that he was not sure he would permit his employees to move into that project, consisting of 600 houses, because he did not know that it would be safe for them to live there.

I think it is the job of this committee to go there and investigate this project, look it over, and try to save some of the money that we seem to be throwing away. I have inspected those houses myself rather closely. They are flat top, prefabricated, demountable, multiple units. I found I could run my hands underneath the walls separating the various units. The different parts of the units had been prefabricated from green lumber. The lumber had warped and had left them in a terrible condition. Also, you can run your fingers between the partitions of the units and the walls.

I am not so sure but what we will have $1,500,000 largely wasted at Burns City, Ind., because of somebody's bungling.

We are also building 400 units at Seymour, Ind., in my district. Three hundred and fifty of those are prefabricated houses. There also was allocated 50 F. H. A. houses. I have a blueprint of the whole project. Thirty-five of the 50 F. H. A. houses are being built on lots that were developed some years ago by a private concern in that city. He laid the water mains, the gas mains and put up the electric light lines for 35 of those houses. The sewers and water mains are laid for all 50. So they lack only two items for the other 15, that is, the power lines and the gas mains. The power company has said that they will take down some line that they have adjoining that area which is not in use, and extend it to these other 15 houses. So the only other things needed are a small amount of critical materials to extend the gas mains. Now the War Production Board will not grant them that critical material for extending only the gas main, where the electric light and the water main and the sewer system is already installed or the material available for it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I suggest the gentleman consult the chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], because out in my county, in a township there where they are repairing these summer homes they get all of the material for the city folks to repair their summer homes so they can come out there in the country and enjoy themselves in the summer. I am sure the gentleman can tell him, because the gentleman who is having this work done is named Sabath.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is a member of this committee, is he not?

Mr. WILSON. I am a member of the committee; yes.

Mr. CURTIS. It seems to me while you are investigating the housing that has been built by the United States Government, and paid for by the taxpayers, that you should at the same time investigate those Federal agencies which are destroying privately owned housing and are discouraging private enterprise from providing housing. I have the facts in reference to a case in a defense center in my district where a gentleman had 18 houses which were renting for $5 a month. When he died the administrator, to make these houses available for defense workers, went into court and secured an order permitting him to improve these houses, to repair them, and put them in good condition. The administrator spent considerable money and placed these houses in good modern condition, but the Office of Price Administration compels him to rent all those houses for $5 a month, the amount they were being rented for on March 1. The tenants were satisfied with the raise in rent, but the O. P. A. said "No." In another town in the same defense area a fine modern house must be rented for $6 because the O. P. A. so decrees. These properties are being rented by defense workers receiving as much as $400 per month. The Office of Price Administration, with its apparent utter contempt for private enterprise, is discouraging private enterprise from building or repairing property for defense workers; then another agency comes along and does it at the taxpayers' expense. I think that should be looked into. Is it the intent of the Government that eventually there will be only one landlord left and that would be Uncle Sam?

Mr. WILSON. I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for his splendid contribution.

I have this blueprint here which shows the location of those 50 F. H. A. houses; shows the water mains and everything there except the transfer of the light line for 15 houses and new gas mains. It would mean a tremendous saving to the Government if we would use a small portion of the critical material used in building temporary houses to extend this gas main and finance them privately.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman realize the number of pay rolls that will be stopped just as soon as that project is settled? Does the gentleman want that? Does he not think the pay rolls play an important part?

Mr. WILSON. They should not play such a part in these critical times. I do not think they should be hoarders of manpower today when it is so badly needed in industries.

Mr. CHURCH. I agree with the gentleman's point of view, but I still think he will find they play a part.

Mr. WILSON. I feel that many of them are probably parasites which could and should be done away with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY] and ask unanimous consent that he may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the Japs attacked us at Pearl Harbor I introduced in this House a bill to eliminate strikes in war industries. Shortly thereafter the President, by Executive order, adopted one provision of that bill, namely, the creation of a board to settle disputes between management and labor, and provided that the findings of this board should be final.

Today, while labor disputes shamefully threaten to stop the west-coast production of the bombing planes we must have, I reintroduce that bill and provide that if the findings of the National War Labor Board are not adhered to by either management or labor and that if such lack of adherence might cause a stoppage or interruption in production, then the Government of the United States shall be empowered to take over the operation of such plant. My bill would guarantee the continuous production of any war weapons regardless of how long labor and management might be involved in dangerous and delaying disputes.

All of the people of this country have fervently hoped that both management and labor had quit scrapping and had turned their fighting energies to answering the challenge of production. We had all hoped that everything would be forgotten except the struggle of bringing this war to a quick and victorious end.

For 8 months I had the high honor and privilege of being on active duty with the United States Navy. In many of the widely scattered areas of the southwest Pacific I saw with my own eyes how badly planes were needed. I know that planes or the lack of them will mean the difference between life and death for multiplied thousands of our men.

It makes my blood boil to see a petty, trivial dispute stop or even slow down the production of these planes and it makes no difference whether such a dispute is the fault of management or labor.

One day's production of bombing planes could have saved Java. A week's production at our present rate might well have saved our raw rubber resources. Lack of air power contributed largely to our first set-back in Africa. This very day we need more planes to smash Germany's submarine bases and to blast Hitler's arms factories. We need more planes to push Rommel and his hordes into the Mediterranean. We need more planes all over the world and it is impossible to hope for victory without superiority in the air.

It is clear that the fault in these disputes lies somewhere between management and labor. Now it seems strange to me, that if a buck private or an officer fell down on the job he would be court-martialed; how then can the guilty parties who knowingly contrive to slow down or stop production be permitted to go scot free? Do they not realize that the boys on the battle fronts are fighting for our lives and for the very lives of those who by their actions retard or deny badly needed weapons of war?

Is this justice? Is this part of our victory drive? Is this the way we answer the pleas of our boys all over the world? Is this the way we hope to win the war?

It seems that there are still many who spend more time thinking of fat profits than they do about Hitler and Hirohito. There are still some in this country who believe that they have a God-given right to cash in on the tragedy of war. There are still those who believe, even when they know the true strength of our enemies, that we can still cling to the peacetime belief that this war can be won on a part-time, spare-time basis.

The philosophy of what can we get out of this war will prove fatal. It must be supplanted by the patriotic theme of what can we give and what can we do to bring this war to a speedy and successful end.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the gentleman from Michigan stated that I could bring about the elimination of special priorities to some people in his State for summer homes. I never had either the opportunity or the pleasure of visiting that section, nor have I ever aided or assisted anyone there. If I had been so inclined—and I never was—I do not think my influence would be any greater than that of the chairman of this committee. We are reporting this resolution, the gentleman understands, to give this splendid committee the right and opportunity to make their investigations wherever there are reasons to believe or circumstances indicating that something may be wrong. They will report it to the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to correct a misunderstanding?

Mr. SABATH. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I did not mean to intimate that the gentleman from Illinois who is talking had anything to do with that. The remotest connection was that the man who was having the work done was named "Sabath." I did not think for a minute that the chairman of the Committee on Rules was having it done. I was just trying to show how even the name carried great influence. I wish the chairman of the committee would come over and see us some time; it would improve his health and he would enjoy himself.

Mr. SABATH. I have never been able to use a summer home; I have been too busy working both summer and winter. I do not know of any Sabath who has a home there.

Mr. HOFFMAN. He is a fine young fellow.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from the State of Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak somewhat out of order, but also on a subject that has a direct bearing, I may say to the chairman of the committee, on this bill. First of all, I listened with great interest to the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas regarding the question of work stoppages in plane plants. Like the gentleman, I have had a little first-hand knowledge on how important the plane is in the Pacific and other areas.

May I say to the House today that I deplore the fact it happened as much as anyone else that there was some dispute which arose in my home city of Seattle regarding the Boeing Aircraft workers. I can report to the House that the matter has all been cleared up. There never was any intention on the part of the workers to have a strike or a work stoppage. I have the figures from the management and it so happens that they lost approximately 2 hours and 15 minutes on 1 day. Management and labor worked hand in hand in the Boeing plant. Those workers had a mass meeting in protest not of the management but of a Government bureau that has been sitting for 8½ long months on a decision it should have made a long time ago. They have agreed to work 6, 8, or 10 hours on any Sunday or any other day they are off to make up for the 2½ hours that were lost. It is all straightened out now and the bureau, I understand, is going to make a decision on the matter this week. They should have done that a long time ago.

While we are on the subject of strikes, I want to read to the House part of a report made by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] and myself. We spent about 30 days investigating Pacific coast shipyards and labor conditions and production in that area. This has a direct bearing on housing. I do not think, of course, that we should tackle all of our problems, but we ought to get to the major problems first. I may say to the Members of the House that in the shipbuilding industry of the Pacific coast, and I think this is typical of all over the country, strikes and shutdowns are no problem at all. Your committee had this to say—

Absenteeism: Another problem was the tragic loss of man-hours due to absenteeism. As a part of this report there is submitted a chart from the California Shipbuilding Co. in Los Angeles on the subject of absenteeism, which is typical of the situation on the coast. Although it is a broad subject, and one dealing with human nature, someone must take hold of the problem of instilling into workers' minds a realization of the critical necessity of staying on the job. There is far too great a tendency, as may be seen from this chart, toward unnecessary absenteeism. For instance, since your committee has returned to Washington, reports have reached it that during the past holiday period there was more absenteeism than ever before. The labor organizations to which the employees belong should thoroughly cooperate in the solution of this problem. The committee found in many instances that union leadership has already been very active in this respect. It is suggested that the Navy Department should collaborate with the unions and management in a program designed to impress upon workers the absolute necessity of remaining on the job.

Your committee made no detailed study of the question of strikes and shut-downs in the shipyards. There have been few of any consequence on the Pacific coast since the master agreement was entered into. However, it must be noted that the Bureau of Ships has reported that during 1942 there was a total of 16 strikes and shut-downs in shipyards engaged on naval work, resulting in the loss of approximately 170,000 man-hours. According to the bureau, this loss on naval work, covering the entire United States, is negligible compared to the losses resulting from absenteeism. The Bureau report seems to coincide exactly with your committee's conclusion as to the west coast yards. Throughout the Nation, in the month of December alone, a total of over 12,700,000 man-hours is estimated to have been lost through absenteeism in shipyards engaged in the construction and repair of naval vessels. A comparison between this and the loss through shut-downs adequately explains why the Bureau considers the shut-down problem negligible as compared to absenteeism. "It will be noted," says the Bureau, "that for only 1 month this is roughly 75 times the number of man-hours lost through strikes an ' shut-downs over the course of the whole year." Loss through absenteeism represents nearly 10 percent of the total man-hours worked during December. The Bureau further states that the most serious aspect of this situation is the fact that the tendency toward absenteeism is steadily increasing. In the Pacific coast area there was an increase of from 5.7 percent to 7.7 percent during the year.

All studies indicate the peak of absenteeism is reached over the week ends, with absences on Saturday and Monday accounting for almost 40 percent of the total man-hours lost. As pointed out in this report, causes include lack of adequate housing and transportation, quitting without notice (which results in workers being carried on the books as absentees), high earnings, long hours (resulting in time being taken off for shopping), weather, and the nature of the work. The deplorable thing about this absenteeism is that none of the reports from the Department of Labor or the Bureau of Ships show that either sickness or accidents played an important part in it. The Bureau reports that one company, with an absenteeism rate of 11.8 percent, showed thorough detailed analysis that industrial injuries accounted for only 1.8 percent and sickness for only 0.3 percent. Absenteeism is the most serious manpower difficulty in the shipbuilding industry. A vigorous publicity campaign is being conducted against it by both employer groups and labor unions.

I may say to the gentleman from Texas that one of the causes of absenteeism in the shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast in particular is due to lack of housing or the placement of houses in proper places. It is one of the reasons why men are absent. They cannot find a place to live. Many of these yards are overmanned and overstaffed, transportation is bad, and many times they have found, in studying this matter, that it is because the housing has not been adequately taken care of or placed in the right places.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Washington realizes that from the standpoint of the committee we do not decide upon the location of the housing. That is an administrative matter. I may say further that thus far all the money has been supplied both through the committee and by appropriation that has been asked for to meet the urgent demand for housing in these areas.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is why this particular legislation is very important. It is one of the causes, although not the predominant cause.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts from General Hines' statement made to a subcommittee on appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss this afternoon, not as an expert but as one profoundly interested in the matter and who has done his share of thinking about it, the food-production problem which we face in America. First, I want to make a general observation.

America is in the greatest war in its history. She has to depend generally on three motives to carry her through successfully. One of those motives is the motive of patriotism. It is the highest and best of all and must be drawn upon by every group and every person. Beyond that there are two possibilities: One is a general draft—of manpower, industrial facilities, and wealth—with governmental direction of the actions of our people. The other is the motive of reasonable incentive of holding forth a fair and reasonable inducement to secure the action which is needed from a national standpoint.

As a general proposition, most of us will probably agree that to the extent we can retain this last motive we will be better off. In other words, to the extent that we can have not only the motive of patriotic devotion to our country to get the things done we need to have done, but also an incentive on the people's part to get them done, we will be that much stronger.

I want to put a few things on all-fours with each other when I start. The proposition of permitting profit to be made in the manufacture of war equipment and the proposition of allowing overtime pay for work beyond a certain number of hours per week, and the proposition of fair prices to our farm producers, and the proposition of a fair wage to farm labor, are on all-fours with one another in this consideration. Any one is exactly the same kind of thing and has the same general sort of effect as the others. If you are going to do away with any of them and go to some other system, then you face a basic decision which is fraught with serious consequences. So, in my speech I am assuming that we are going to try to secure the war production we need and solve our problems by the use of reasonable incentive to our people to accomplish the things our country must have accomplished and that we will attempt to avoid compulsion as long, at least, as we can.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I recall the gentleman introduced a bill in October 1939, to take the excess profits out of our war efforts.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; along with the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is correct. I introduced a similar bill at the same time, having the same purpose. I assume there is no inconsistency in what the gentleman is now saying and his proposal at that time. I feel that I am perfectly consistent in allowing reasonable profits as an incentive while demanding that unusual, war profits be taxed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman and I introduced like bills. They were tax bills. Now, I say to the gentleman that the tax rates we proposed in our bills at that time were probably not as high as the tax rates that are presently in effect. All we were trying to do was to prevent the making of millionaires out of the war. There was ample incentive left under our bills, because they applied only to profits in excess of normal earnings and even then the rates were graduated.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is exactly true.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think there can be no doubt in anyone's mind at present but that next to the military fighting on the fronts of this world the most important and serious problem America faces is the problem of food production. In consideration of the whole matter of farm prices, farm manpower, the availability of machinery, and everything else, it is not, in my judgment, either accurate or fair to talk about those things as though it were simply a drive on the part of some so-called farm bloc to get something for a special group. The major and fundamental proposition is to try to have a situation where we can be certain to secure the maximum food production, which the Nation must have.

I discount completely talk about farmers being unwilling to go ahead, or stopping their work. I do not think that will happen under any circumstances where it can possibly be financially avoided by a farm operator in America. But I do think we have a duty to be sure they can go on as they desire to do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman believe we are ever going to get sufficient men to work the farms as long as the factories pay wages two or three times what a man can make on the farm?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am coming to that in my speech in the normal course, and I would rather not speak on it now, if the gentleman does not mind.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well; that is all right.

WHY RATIONING?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to put myself on record as believing this, because I know it is not going to be very popular in the next few months. I think wherever we have a scarcity of any type of commodity, particularly if it is an important one, we must in fairness have a rationing program to see that such supplies of that commodity as we do have are fairly distributed among the people. I know the operation of those rationing programs is not going to be very popular, but I do not know any other way to do it properly and to make sure that these scarce commodities reach all sections of the country and all sections of the population on a fair distribution basis.

It seems to me that the factors in this food-production problem fall into four general categories: First, the matter of price; second, the matter of manpower; third, the matter of machinery; and, fourth, the matter of a balance of production, by which I mean the securing of those crops in sufficient quantity which are particularly needed in view of the present situation. I shall discuss as many of these as I have time for this afternoon. I shall try to supply some constructive answers.

NEED FOR SIMPLIFICATION

May I make one over-all observation? If there is one thing that is needed more than anything else it is a need for the maximum possible amount of simplification of the farmers' present problems, the removal of as much red tape, conflicts of responsibility, and confusion as possible. May I illustrate with three or four examples.

I have not been able to see why in connection with the meat problem, which has been a serious thing in our section of the country, we could not avoid all the difficulties connected with the application of the 70-percent quotas on deliveries to the civilian trade by simply saying to the Army and Navy and other governmental purchasers, "You have first priority. You have first right to buy meat. You can purchase as much as you need for our armed forces and for other war purposes, but as far as the limitations on delivery for civilian trade are concerned, we are not going to have a system like that. All we are going to say is that the first right is to the armed forces and to other governmental purchasers, and the civilians will in the normal course receive on the basis of fair distribution whatever is left over." It seems to me that would avoid a whole lot of red tape and difficulty, which now surrounds the meat problem.

Another example of the same sort of thing occurs with regard to machinery. It seems to me there ought to be a definite centralization of this whole farm-machinery program in one farm-machinery administrator, and everybody ought to know who he is. The War Production Board ought to make one over-all allocation of as much steel and as much equipment as is possible to be given to agriculture, and thereafter allocations of that machinery and repair parts should be made to the various counties of the country on the basis of what the local county war boards say is needed in their areas, rather than what someone in Washington decides may be needed. All this should be in the hands of the Agriculture Department and nowhere else.

I think there needs to be definitely one agency responsible for farm manpower. At present there are three or four, and nobody seems to know exactly which one really has the responsibility in certain areas. That situation ought to be ended at once and there should be one agency, that everyone in the country would know was responsible for all phases of that problem.

As far as the farmer is concerned, I should like to see him able to go to just one place in each county in this country, insofar as possible, where all these various things that he has to contact the Government on could be centralized—gasoline, machinery, labor, and all the rest. For example, I should like to see one simple application for all the gasoline and oil the farmer is going to need for any purpose, approved by the county war board, and to have this complete his contact with the whole gasoline rationing program. That is what Mr. Jeffers has been contending for, and I think he is right.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In his proposal, does the gentleman appreciate the fact that, while this simplification is undoubtedly economically feasible, a lot of the so-called specialists would be let out of their positions, and that would be a rather uncomfortable position for them to be found in.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think the other consideration is more important, I may say to the gentleman. I believe simplification of this thing is very necessary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understood that, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Now, I want to make it plain that I am in support of the efforts of our Government to prevent inflationary increases in living costs. The only fundamental way to do that is by monetary controls, taxation, and compulsory savings, so as to keep total buying power in line with the total supply of goods. But to do it effectively by this method we would, as a Congress, have to go much further than we have along all three of these lines. So we fall back on price control. I do not think we can expect to completely prevent any increases. Some adjustments, in fairness and equity, will need to be made. Some Government workers, like postal workers, need and deserve an increase. People dependent on old-age payments need, very much, enough more dollars a month to at least make up for increased living costs. Price ceilings for some businesses will need adjustment as a result of the recent 48-hour week order. And some farm prices will, in my opinion, have to be allowed to increase, as I will in a moment show.

To guard our children's health, I hope, meanwhile, we will, as a war measure and one that we could well continue into peacetime, extend our school lunch and penny milk programs. I shall speak more of this at some future time.

WHAT PRICES SHALL THE FARMER RECEIVE?

I come now to a discussion of farm prices. First it seems to me perfectly plain that if we are to get sufficient production, that no price upon any commodity in any portion of the country ought ever to be fixed where the ceiling on that commodity is below the cost of production. That seems to me to be self-evident. One of the members of the California delegation, [Mr. ELLIOTT], has introduced a bill, H. R. 2009, which would provide that under the so-called Anti-Inflation Act no ceiling price could be fixed below a reasonable cost of production for a farm commodity. That bill is the result of discussion and action by the California delegation in the House. I have an example of what happened in one case in my own country, the county of Los Angeles. There the price of milk was raised late in the month of January from 97 cents per pound of butterfat to $1.08 per pound of butterfat. This action was taken under the State law of the State of California by the California Milk Control Board after exhaustive hearings in which representatives of both producers and consumers were heard. On February 13, an over-all freeze order on milk prices was issued by the Office of Economic Stabilization, providing that prices of milk should be no higher in any portion of the country than the highest price received in January. Since the milk price fixed by the California Milk Control Board did not go into effect until February 1, this action on the part of the Government had the effect of lowering the price back to its previous level.

Figures on the cost of production for dairymen in the Los Angeles area indicate beyond reasonable doubt that this price represents a return to dairymen below their cost of production. That cost includes among other things the payment of wages of some $200 per months to their milkers. This wage, moreover, must compare with wages in shipyards and aircraft factories and it is no more than just that agricultural workers receive something like the same compensation as industrial workers do for equally important work.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think the gentleman from California is not quite right. It was the October price that was referred to. That 97 cents would have been all right in October, but by January it had risen to $1.08.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I had considerable consultation with dairymen from our country out there, and they told me they were perfectly willing to pay these wages, but that they should have a price which would enable them to do so. The price of alfalfa hay increased from $23 in October to $40 before the price was stabilized at about $31.50 delivered to these dairymen, an increase of about 25 percent over October. From all the evidence at my command I am convinced that the price fixed by the California Milk Control Board was not too much and was a reasonable price. I believe that if the price ceiling in that area or in any other area is fixed below the cost of production, that it ought to be adjusted at once so as to at least cover such costs.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I notice that it says in today's paper—and my people are fed this sort of literature—that the meat prices were fixed on March 15, and that because Boston observes Lent, they allowed you in Los Angeles a higher ceiling, and it seems to me that if they had the same ceiling in Boston, we would be all right.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Los Angeles is a long way off, and the freight charges are considerable. We have been extremely short of meat out there for a long, long time; probably more so than any other part of the country.

Mr. GIFFORD. The point I am making is this, Does the gentleman think we should be punished in Boston for observing Lent?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, no; certainly not. I may say that we observe Lent, too, in California. I would like now to read to the House a portion of a letter that I recently received. It is from Mr. Benjamin, the secretary of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Cooperative Association.

It reads in part as follows:

> If we are no longer able to purchase wheat on the basis that we have heretofore been purchasing, it will mean an immediate increase on poultry feeds of some $10 to $14 per ton according to the amount of wheat used, and in dairy and other feeds in proportionate amounts.
>
> Poultrymen are at this time purchasing the baby chicks that will lay the eggs and furnish the meat for the consumers in the latter part of 1943 and the fore part of 1944. A poultryman cannot be expected to make the necessary investment in poultry flocks if there is no possibility that he can operate these flocks on a basis where he can have a reasonable expectancy of getting a return of the money invested, plus enough money to provide a livelihood for himself and his family. The same thing holds true with the dairyman.
> Coming almost identically with the wheat situation is the announcement of the ceiling price on eggs, a ceiling, by the way, which apparently is aimed to discourage not only an increased production of eggs but to decrease the already inadequate supply. One of two things must be done immediately if we are to have dairy and poultry products that will come anywhere near to supplying the demand. Either make available immediately ample supplies of wheat now being held with the Commodity Credit Corporation for feeding purposes at prices no higher than they have been, or else take the other and perhaps preferable course—immediately remove all price restrictions or ceilings affecting both dairy and poultry products and let the price range be governed by the demand which I am sure will adequately take care of the increased cost of production.

I believe that is a very significant letter, and I quote it, as will be seen, not because it comes from my own district but because of its Nation-wide importance.

In the first place, Mr. Benjamin urges support of the bill now before the Agriculture Committee to free 100,000,000 bushels of Commodity Credit Corporation wheat, because he says it is absolutely necessary for poultrymen and dairymen to provide them with feed, and, in the second place, he points out that at the present time dairymen and poultrymen are finding it very difficult to plan for the future and are even threatened with being forced to go out of business, in view of the ceiling prices set and in view, on the other hand, of the rising cost of feed and other costs of production. He urges the removal of the ceiling prices. I do not know whether you could completely remove price ceilings, but I do say that they should be adjusted upward to cover the cost of production. And I know that ceiling prices on poultry products in the Los Angeles area, as well as milk prices there, are having the same effect as Mr. Benjamin describes for Pennsylvania. So, though I would be the last to want to increase living costs unnecessarily, I say these ceilings must be lifted if we are to get the production we simply must have.

Low-priced food is good if it can be fairly had. But it is more important that we have sufficient food.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield briefly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I received a letter from Nat Dysart, of Phoenix, Ariz., speaking for the dairy industry in that part of the State, and his picture of their situation is about the same as the gentleman has presented. Perhaps the problem is uniform throughout the country.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

In all considerations, whether by Congress or the O. P. A. or the Department of Agriculture or anybody else, maximum production must be the first consideration and low prices have to be second. The rule must be that no action should be taken which will reduce production.

In this connection, there is a difference between the problem with regard to the so-called basic crops on the one hand and some of the specialty crops that are raised in a State like California, on the other. I happen to be in sympathy with the fundamental principle of the Bankhead bill that the Senate recently passed, because I think it is fair and just. But that is not going to solve much of the problem for the dairymen and the poultrymen, the citrus grower, or a lot of the people who grow specialty crops. Indeed, the raising of prices of the so-called basic crops sometimes works to the disadvantage of these other farmers since it may increase the cost of their feed. This must be borne in mind.

Now, there has been legislation before the House providing for the inclusion of farm labor costs in the computation of the parity formula. I have done a lot of thinking about this proposal. It has seemed to me, as I have thought about it and as this problem has developed, that there was a great deal of merit in that proposal, because probably the fundamental reason for the shortage of agricultural manpower has been the fact that farm incomes generally have been less than other people's incomes through the years. That has been true both on the farmer's side and on the hired help side of the picture.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In just a moment.

I am more and more of the belief that if there were inclusion of farm labor costs in the parity formula and a provision for increases in labor costs in the ceiling prices in every case, that might help tremendously toward solving the basic problem that has existed wherein farm wages have been laid down because farm income has not been large enough to allow for payment to farm labor of wages more nearly in line with other wages. I realize this is a very big question. But I am also convinced there is a fundamental principle of justice involved.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield briefly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understood the gentleman to say that in his judgment farm labor should be included in the parity price.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it true that in your country, help, milking cows, gets $200 and $250 a month?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes. In some instances they do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And that cost is added on to the price that is charged the consumer, is it?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes. I said I believed the price that has been fixed was not enough to enable the dairyman to make both ends meet, and I think the ceiling must be raised.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The trouble is that the hired help instead of the owner of the cow was getting the raise.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The wages were as I said. I also said the dairymen talked to me about the matter and the dairymen said that they had to pay wages like that in order to compete with the wages in the airplane and shipyard industries, just as the gentleman said. They had no complaint about that phase of it, but all they asked was that their price enable them to cover it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you not think that our farmers——

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman that I do not care to yield further. I have a speech here that I would like to make.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But you just glossed over that part which affects us in the East.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have not glossed it over.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you think that our hired men on the farm should get $200 and $250 also? Why should they not?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It depends on what they are doing, of course. These milkers are very highly skilled workers, and I frankly doubt that farmers generally could possibly pay wages anything like that. That is the very thing we must, in my opinion, face up to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They are trying to produce beef for you people in California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would rather not yield further at this point. I will simply say that I hope we can work toward a fair and just relationship between farm incomes all along the line and other incomes.

THE SMALL FARMS

The problem of farm production affects not only the 1,000,000 farmers in this country who produce the bulk of our farm production and receive about one-half of the farm income and who ordinarily hire considerable labor, but it also has to do with a considerably larger number of what I might call small-farm operators. Those operators of small farms by and large do their own work. There are about 5,000,000 of them. They are people who do not hire very much labor, and their production can in many cases, in my judgment, be increased considerably if they can have reasonable assistance, particularly if they can be assisted with really cheap credit in purchasing a little livestock and improving some of their farm practices. These small farmers are a most important factor in helping their country at this time.

Some of these farmers' own production on their farms has not got up to this "16 units of production" standard that was set up for exemption from the draft. I believe that that standard is going to have to be liberalized. It would certainly be wrong in the present situation for a farm operator to be drafted. Rather than that, I would want to see him able to increase his farm production. And I am convinced that is not only possible but is happening. I would like to point out that in the case of 80 percent of the people who have received so-called rehabilitation loans from the Farm Security Administration, those loans have been repaid currently. That, in my opinion, is proof of the character of these people.

Figures which I want to insert at this point in my speech on the increases in production for which these small farms have been responsible in the last year, are to me very inspiring figures. Here is an element in the possibility of increased food production which sometimes is not discussed as much as it should be and which must be taken fully into account. For it may offer us more hope than we can have from any other direction.

For example, I will give you one figure on the increased production of dried beans.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics figures indicate that 27 percent of the increase came from people who were borrowers from the Farm Security Administration and that 10 percent of the increase in the production of eggs came from the same group.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put that table in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Increases in production of essential crop and livestock products between 1941 and 1942 by all farmers and by Farm Security Administration borrowers

| Product | All farmers | | F. S. A. borrowers | | Percent of net increase by all farmers contributed by F. S. A. borrowers |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Amount increase, 1941–42 | Percent increase | Amount increase, 1941–42 | Percent increase | |
| Milk (pounds) | 3,914,000,000 | 3 | 1,419,000,000 | 20 | 36 |
| Pork (pounds live weight) | 2,252,000,000 | 13 | 192,400,000 | 36 | 9 |
| Eggs (dozen) | 516,000,000 | 15 | 49,800,000 | 31 | 10 |
| Beef (pounds live weight) | 1,767,000,000 | 11 | 124,300,000 | 38 | 7 |
| Chickens (pounds live weight) | 366,365,000 | 14 | 37,100,000 | 36 | 10 |
| Peanuts (pounds) | 1,028,000,000 | 70 | 101,700,000 | 88 | 10 |
| Soybeans (bushel) | 104,000,000 | 98 | 3,360,000 | 106 | 3 |
| Dry beans (pounds) | 110,500,000 | 6 | 30,100,000 | 34 | 27 |
| Sugar beets (ton) | 1,616,000 | 16 | 113,000 | 24 | 7 |

|---|---|
| Total number of all farmers | 6,097,000 |
| Number of actively supervised Farm Security Administration borrowers producing in 1942 | 463,941 |
| Proportion of all farmers who were actively supervised Farm Security Administration borrowers, percent | 7.6 |

Mr. VOORHIS of California. So I think in the first place that we have a problem of price, where that price has got to be a price that is fair and just to the farmer. I am in sympathy with my colleagues who believe that it should not be below parity in any case. I think they are right. I believe the price of citrus fruits should not have been fixed below parity, as was done with the result that orange growers in my section are at present having a most difficult time. I believe their prices should be at parity, not below it. I am also certain that no price ever ought to be below the cost of production in any case; and I should like to see the cost of farm labor included in the formula. And in the case of these small farmers who comprise about five-sixths of the whole farm population of this land there should be pressed vigorously every means of enabling those people to raise some livestock and improve their farm practices as they are unable to do with the Farm Security rehabilitation loan program, so that they can continue to account for increases in our food supplies.

MANPOWER FOR FOOD PRODUCTION

In the matter of greater food production we come face to face with the problem of manpower. There are two different problems in connection with this; one is the problem of the regularly employed year-around skilled farm hand; the other is the problem of seasonal labor for the harvesting of crops. These two problems are entirely different and distinct, it seems to me. In connection with the first one, the securing of competent year-round labor, I am ready to go to the extent of making it possible for a farmer to make an appeal to the local draft board, or perhaps to let him take it to his county War Board, so that where an irreplaceable man has been drafted into the Army off the farm, he could get that man furloughed out of the Army to do this all-important farm work. And certainly we should not draft any more such essential farm workers at all. The next problem, that of seasonal labor, has got to be solved too, but it will involve different measures.

America is in the midst of total war and part of the cost of total war has been shortage of manpower on our farms, partly because the income of the farm people is below the income of the other people, partly due to other causes. We need labor every place; we need it in industry; we need it on the farms; we need it in a hundred and one different places. And we need men for the fighting forces. So I say with regard to the furnishing of this seasonal labor that we have got to do everything we can think of to draw upon all kinds of groups. So far as possible, they should be people with at least some familiarity with agricultural work. Some of this labor probably will come from high-school boys and girls, supervised wherever possible by some of their teachers. Some of it will come from people who may go out of other occupations and be able to do this sort of work. Some can be recruited in those few portions of the country where there are still people not fully employed. Some of this work may be done by people who could be spared temporarily even from other jobs in order to help with it. Some of this labor we are trying to bring from our neighboring Republic of Mexico. I should not object at all to seeing us take a recess in Congress and some of us helping out on it. From all groups possible this farm labor will have to be recruited in an orderly way. In any case, the point I am making is that there is not any easy solution of this problem of seasonal farm labor except that the responsibility for its recruitment has got to be put in one place, with one agency; and that agency should be responsible for the recruitment, mobilization, transportation, housing, and placement of those workers. It must also be recognized that if a Government agency is to recruit labor—especially if the workers come from a foreign country—there must be some responsibility for housing, wage standards, and similar conditions, as well as for seeing that the workers do effective work for the farmer. And now I am not going to get into an argument about what agency ought to do it; I know it ought to be one agency and I know that the time has passed when there should be any argument. Personally, it is my opinion that the Farm Security Administration can do the job, and that on the whole, in spite of some complaints, that they are better qualified perhaps than anybody else to go all the way through with it; but I am not going to talk about that; one agency should have charge, whether it be the Farm Security, the Extension Service, or some other. A long time ago California farmers urged that a special and separate farm-labor section be established in connection with the United States Employment Service. Had that been done, it might have answered the problem. The essential thing now is to definitely centralize this responsibility at once.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Briefly.

Mr. CURTIS. In reference to using young people, students, on farm work, assuming that they are physically able to do it, what are you going to do to stop them from going into industry and getting the higher wages that have drawn away a great deal of farm labor?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not know what you are going to do to stop people from going into industry unless you want to freeze labor.

Mr. CURTIS. Is not that the difficulty with farm labor?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Unless you freeze labor all of the way along the line, I do not see how you can stop people from going into certain jobs. But in California at least we do not have any great number of high-school boys and girls going into industry on account of the child-labor laws.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that not where most of the farm labor comes from?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. A good deal of it; yes, sir.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think the answer to the gentleman from Nebraska would be that these youths would have to have a permit to work in those factories.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; they would.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. If this food problem is serious enough, it would surely never be required to have any permit for these younger people to work.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right, so far as agriculture is concerned. I thank the gentleman very much.

SOIL CONSERVATION CAN BE A POSITIVE, NOT A RESTRICTIVE, PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker, in the course of conversation on the floor about this farm problem, two or three gentlemen have gotten up and said that they thought we ought to repeal completely the Soil Conservation Act. I want to address myself to that for a few moments because the fact of the matter is—and I am not going into a whole lot of detail about it—that 3 percent of our good farm land in this country, or 57,000,000 acres, has been completely destroyed by erosion, another 12 percent of it, or 225,000,000 acres, has lost about three-quarters of its good top soil, and three-fourths of our croplands today are in need of some type of erosion control. And now, with more extensive use of our soil required than ever before, there is correspondingly greater need to guard and protect it. I have some figures here—and I ask unanimous consent to insert them with my speech in the RECORD—on the yield per acre of wheat, corn, cotton, peanuts, soybeans, and flaxseed for the 5-year period from 1928 to 1932 and the 5-year period from 1938 to 1942.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will notice the difference between these figures and the increased yield per acre in the later period, which certainly is in large part the result of the operation of the Soil Conservation Act.

Average yield per acre, 1928–32, 5 years before Soil Conservation Act

| Crop: | | |
|---|---|---|
| Wheat | bushels | 14.14 |
| Corn | do | 24.66 |
| Cotton | pounds | 173.92 |
| Peanuts | do | 683.44 |
| Soybeans | bushels | 14.16 |
| Flax seed | do | 5.76 |

Average yield per acre, 1938–42, 5 years after Soil Conservation Act

| Crop: | | |
|---|---|---|
| Wheat | bushels | 15.88 |
| Corn | do | 30.4 |
| Cotton | pounds | 248.62 |
| Peanuts | do | 739.02 |
| Soybeans | bushels | 18.94 |
| Flax seed | do | 9.26 |

I think that payments to farmers for engaging in these soil building practices are justified for the reason that he, the farmer, usually makes some sacrifice, financially, to carry them on. I do not think they are subsidies. They are simply payments to enable farmers to preserve the greatest heritage we have to give to future generations of America, namely, the heritage of a fertile soil.

At the moment it is absolutely necessary that we secure certain types of crops for this war which have not in the past been extensively grown. I am not in favor of having any program in effect which will reduce the production of anything we need. I think lifting of all restrictions on wheat was absolutely right. I do think that the Soil Conservation Act can be used positively instead of as a means of restriction and I think it is necessary that it be used positively now, so as to offer an inducement and an incentive to farmers to produce those types of crops which they have not been normally producing and which are sometimes difficult to produce but which America today needs very much for this war.

Mr. Speaker, there are several phases of this food production problem which I have not time to discuss now. One of them is the necessity of an adequate supply and sensible distribution of machinery. I will conclude with these thoughts.

America today is at war. American soldiers are dying on the fields of Tunisia and in the south Pacific. It is useless for Members to get up on the floor and say that we should by some magic waving of the congressional hand bring back the good old days. We are not in the good old days. We are in the most terrible crisis in all the history of America, and every resource of this Nation must be bent toward winning of this war and supplying the sinews thereof. Our economy is twisted all out of shape by this war and we cannot help that fact. Every group is going to suffer to some extent. But the one principle of all-out maximum production must be paramount to all others. Your Agricultural Committee is taking up a complete consideration of this whole problem of food production. I hope the committee will do this with a completely open mind and with only one objective in view, namely, the securing of the maximum possible balanced production of agricultural commodities, both for the war period and for the future of our country and the world.

Next to actual military operations on the fighting front there is no problem so crucial for America at the present time as that of food production. No action, whether it be in the passage of legislation by the Congress, or in the fixing of price ceilings, or in the determination of manpower policies, which has the effect of reducing agricultural production can be justified in the present situation. It is the duty of Congress to insist by legislation, if necessary, that in the consideration of the fixing of prices not only the restraining of inflationary rises in the cost of living be considered but also the effect of such action upon the production of an adequate supply of food.

The time has passed when a negative attitude toward the problem of food production on the part of any governmental official, any Member of Congress, farmers, consumers, or anybody else will answer the problem. There has got to be a vigorous advocacy of the necessity of abundant food production in America and it is no good merely complaining about the things that are wrong. Constructive action must be taken at once with regard to each of these matters. And above all there must be simplification and streamlining of all the contracts our farmers have with governmental agencies. I believe this can be accomplished, I believe it must be.

No over-all panacea will answer the problem, nor will the repeal of all existing agricultural legislation answer it. The problem is far deeper than that and must be considered in the light of the fact that America is in the midst of the greatest and most terrible war in all the history of the world, wherein her need for food and for fiber is greater than ever before in history. The production record of our farmers for 1942 broke all records in spite of difficulties. In 1943 we must do everything needful to make it possible for our farmers to do at least as well again.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at this time, notwithstanding other special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL]?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is in order and if the House unanimously agrees the Chair may recognize the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are other special orders, of which I have one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are 2 hours and 15 minutes of special orders.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have notified others that I would yield 5 minutes extra time if they asked me, but I will yield for no further extra time. I would not request more than 5 minutes extra time. We have done it in some cases of outstanding speeches of the kind I cannot make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two things that have come to my attention through the public press in the last few days that after listening to the most interesting speech of the distinguished gentleman from California I want to call to the attention of the House. I am very much interested in this matter of farm production. I have borne in mind so many times, as all of you have, the words of Napoleon when he said that an army fights upon its belly.

We have before us today a very critical situation in the matter of the production of the necessary food to fight this war with. If I had a half hour instead of 5 minutes I could say a lot of things that have been in my mind. I am going to take this time to say to you gentlemen here today, because I know you are very earnest about this whole matter of food production, that I picked up the paper the other day and I read an article which doubtless many of you saw, in which it was stated that out here in Maryland dairymen were selling their herds, disposing of them, because they could not go ahead with production under the present price ceilings on milk. I happen to know that out in Missouri, where I live, the same situation has obtained for 6 months or longer and many, many hundreds of herds have been sold and disposed of at junk prices at a time when we need milk, butter, and cheese more than we have ever needed it before, just because of the thoughtless orders issued by certain bureaucrats regarding price ceilings on milk as well as other farm products.

In this article I saw in the paper the other day it quoted the Secretary of Agriculture as saying that the farmers need not worry, the United States Government is going to buy their dairy cows wherever they cannot stay in business by reason of price ceilings or because they cannot get help or for any other reason. The Government is going to buy up their herds. I will confess my observation has been that the bureaucrats have had considerable experience in milking the public, but I do not think that experience fits them to milk these thousands of cows that they seek to take over.

While that remark may be somewhat facetious, I do think we are faced with a very critical and serious situation if the United States Government by reason of the unwise regulations with which it has hedged about the dairy industry starts in to buy up all the dairy herds of this country. I do not believe the dairy industry is going to function with bureaucrats milking the cows. I think we ought to make sensible regulations and let the farmers go on milking these cows.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I read the same thing the gentleman from Missouri did. I think it was one of the most dangerous invitations I have ever seen. It provided that where farmers were going to kill their herds the Government would buy them, so all a farmer has to do to unload his cows on the Government is to threaten to kill them. The first thing you know the Government will get all the dairy cows in this country and we will be without milk and butter entirely.

Mr. BELL. That is a very serious thing from the standpoint of the production of milk, butter, and cheese. It is also a serious thing, as I see it, from the standpoint of the future of this country. More than once I have quoted the statement of Thomas Jefferson that whenever we get to the point that more than 50 percent of the people of the country have abandoned their farms and moved into the cities we are going to be faced with serious difficulties.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I have listened with great interest to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. Day after day on the floor of this House I have listened to other statements which point out a situation of which we all are quite well aware and which causes us deep concern. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, What do you propose to do about it?

Mr. BELL. It would take me 30 minutes to tell the gentleman that. I propose to take the floor sometime soon and give my ideas on that point. I cannot do it in the short time that is left.

Mr. KEEFE. I hope somebody from the Democratic side will tell us what they propose to do about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein two short bills introduced today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION FOR EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN WAR PRODUCTION

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, ever since the sit-down strikes, which began on the last day of December 1936, the God-given, the constitutional right of a man to work to earn a livelihood has been successfully challenged by certain labor leaders and organizations.

That challenge has been successful because, and only because, it had back of it the support of this administration, which, in return, has received the political support of those who have levied tribute upon the exercise of the right of the American worker to support his family by his daily toil.

For 6 years, this administration and the New Deal organization has connived with certain labor leaders, racketeers, and politicians to deprive American workers of their freedom from want, their freedom from fear. During all that time, with two exceptions, the Congress has failed to come to the rescue of the American worker, whose loyalty, patriotism, and willingness to work in defense of his country, to carry on the war, no sensible individual has ever questioned.

Today with war production seriously curtailed by absenteeism, by slow-downs and by strikes; with an impending threat to tie up coal production when the miners' agreements expire in March, and with the papers carrying many news stories of threatened strikes in the aircraft industry, the administration still lacks the inclination or the courage to solve the problem.

In my judgment, we do not need anti-strike legislation. That conclusion is based upon the assumption that the American worker, with his sons and his brothers in the armed forces, will willingly do his utmost in support of the fighting men, if permitted to do so without restriction.

To break up the corrupt political alliance which has existed, and which today exists, between the administration and labor politicians and racketeers, I have today introduced a bill prohibiting political contributions by labor organizations, this in the form of an amendment to the so-called Corrupt Practices Act.

To unshackle the American worker, to free him from the tyranny of the administration-backed labor organizations, I have introduced a bill which will prevent those who would keep him from employment, levy tribute upon him, from continuing their unlawful activities.

If the Seventy-eighth Congress has the courage which those who sent it here thought it would have, they will pass this or similar legislation without undue delay and insist that the other body do likewise; and if the President vetoes it, the Congress will pass it over his head.

The time for mealymouthed pussyfooting ended long, long ago. The time for plain speaking is here. Action is long overdue.

Today I have introduced two bills the passage of one of which will tend to break the connection between political contributions and war production and the other of which will free workers from the rule of labor politicians while at the same time not interfering with the right to strike:

A bill to protect employees engaged in war production

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, alone or acting with another or others, directly or indirectly, by force, coercion, intimidation, or by show or threat of force, or attempt to use force, to force or attempt to force any person to become, be, or remain a member of any labor organization; or, by force, coercion, intimidation, or threat of force, or attempt to use force, to force or attempt to force any person to refrain from engaging in or remaining in employment; or by force, coercion, intimidation, or by show or threat of force, or attempt to use force, to interfere or attempt to interfere with any employee or other person on his or her way to or from employment, or while seeking employment, which in any way contributes to the production of anything which is to be used directly or indirectly for national defense or the prosecution of the war, or which may become an article of interstate or foreign commerce.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any labor organization or the officers thereof, or for any other organization or the officers thereof, to commit any of the acts herein made unlawful when committed by a person or a group of persons.

SEC. 3. Interference in the manner prescribed in section 1, with each employee or other person is hereby made a separate and distinct offense.

SEC. 4. In addition to any other penalty imposed by this act, every person or organization violating the terms hereof shall be liable to every employee or person deprived of employment by violation of section 1 for double the amount of damage suffered by such employee or other person, which said damages shall be not less than the sum of $50, together with the costs of such suit, including an attorney fee of $25, which said damages shall be recoverable in any court of record of any State or any Federal court sitting in the State where such violation may occur, and jurisdiction of such actions and of the persons and organizations involved therein is hereby conferred upon such courts.

SEC. 5. Any person violating any provision of this act shall, for each act, be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment of not more than 1 year.

SEC. 6. If any provision of this act, or the application of any provision, to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, or the application of such provision, to any person or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

---

A bill to amend section 251 of title 2 of the United States Code (February 28, 1925, ch. 368, title III, section 313, 43 Stat. 1074)

Be it enacted, etc., That section 251 of title 2 of the United States Code (February 28, 1925, ch. 368, title III, section 313, 43 Stat. 1074), be amended by adding after the comma, which follows the word "Congress" in the first sentence, the following: "or any other corporation, or any labor union, organization, association, or group charging initiation fees or collecting dues from employees" so that said section when amended shall read as follows:

"It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, or any other corporation, or any labor union, organization, association, or group charging initiation fees or collecting dues from employees, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political office, or for any corporation whatever to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation who consents to any contribution by the corporation in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST] is recognized for 15 minutes.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time this afternoon because by this time tomorrow the House will be engaged in the consideration of a very important and far-reaching resolution, and because time for debate may be somewhat limited at that time, I wanted to bring to the attention of the House this afternoon just a very few basic considerations in connection with the so-called Nichols resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it has required 100 years for the world in reality to catch up with the vision of Tennyson 100 years ago. In case you have not read Locksley Hall for some time, I want to read you just a few lines that were penned by Tennyson in 1840:

I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

After 100 years the world has in reality caught up with the vision of the poet of 100 years ago. We have universal interest today in the question of aviation and have a universal recognition of the great importance aviation will play in that period when the world returns once more to its peaceful pursuits after the war has ended and the battle flags have been furled.

Growing out of that universal interest and the recognition of the importance of commercial and civil aviation is a proposal before the House of Representatives that there be set up in this House a special committee to deal with legislation affecting civil and commercial aviation. That is the origin and purpose of the resolution, the widespread interest in commercial and civil aviation. But I am impelled to ask further what reason brings this proposal before us at this time.

If you will just strip this proposal of all the superfluous arguments that have been made pro and con and reduce it to its very simple thesis, I believe you will agree with me that this resolution confronts us now because there is a presumption, at least, that there is a legislative job to be done by the House of Representatives, and that there does not now exist in the House of Representatives adequate legislative machinery to do that job. To me, that is the only justification that could bring this proposal before the House at this time.

Let us admit that if there is a legislative job to be done, and the House of Representatives does not have adequate legislative machinery to do it, if it does not have legislative machinery that is willing or able to function, then we need to set up another committee to do that job. But if we admit, on the other hand, that the House of Representatives today does have sufficient legislative machinery to do an adequate job on whatever legislation now is necessary, or whatever legislation may be necessary when we also "dip into the future far as human eyes can see," then we do not need to establish another standing committee of this House to deal with the class of legislation. To me, that is the argument in the whole matter. We may discuss today every phase of legislation, past and present, we may dip into the future, we may visualize, as well we might, the great progress that certainly will come in this field when the war is over, but we come back finally to that one question.

Mr. Speaker, for several years I coached football. I have never yet in an emergency, in a tight game, when the going was rough, deemed it wise to take out my regulars, my veterans, who knew what they were doing, who had had long experience on that job, and substitute for them men who had not been under fire, men who were not veterans with experience.

Let us for a moment examine that. Suppose a new committee is established in the House of Representatives to deal with the question of commercial and civil aviation. Let us examine into what would be the functions of that particular committee and what some of the results might be. Suppose that we do set up this committee. Suppose that by this time tomorrow we have decided that such a step should be taken—and I say with all reverence, Heaven forbid that we should take such action—but suppose that should be the action of the House, what then? The great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a committee that has for a score of years studied this whole problem of aviation and has reported very far-sighted legislation, will be stripped of its legislative functions insofar as its program of aviation is concerned. The new committee, at the very start of its legislative program, will have to work out all of the difficulties, all of the interrelated problems of an integrated transportation system in this Nation.

That would be the first step, Mr. Speaker, toward tearing down what has been built up along that line. Then what would happen? The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce still would have legislative supervision over our transportation by railroads, transportation by busses, by trucks, and other methods, and you would have, so to speak, competing committees of this House dealing with legislation for competitive systems of transportation.

Mr. Speaker, during the considerations that were recently had before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on another piece of legislation we had witness after witness appear before that committee. I am not going into a discussion of H. R. 1012, the House bill which has been mentioned on this floor a number of times in connection with the resolution that is coming before the House tomorrow, because H. R. 1012 can stand on its own merits, and will at the proper time. But witness after witness came before the committee in its considerations and my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON], never let a witness leave the stand without asking him this question:

Has there been any time in the past when there was not adequate legislation for the maximum development of aviation in this country? Is there at this time needed, other than that now proposed any legislation that is vitally necessary for the present or future development of aviation?

And, without exception, these witnesses told the committee, in answer to questions of the gentleman from New Jersey, that they did not know of a single instance in which the committee had been derelict in performing its duties for the sake of the aviation program of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true that a little while ago when legislation was under consideration with regard to the lake shippers and truckers that the railroads lobbied against that legislation?

Mr. PRIEST. I cannot agree that that is true, but I would like to yield to my friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] to answer that question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The answer is "No."

Mr. PRIEST. I have only been on the committee a few months and insofar as I am informed that has never occurred.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not also true that Members of Congress receive arguments—let us put it that way—from the railroads against the enactment of that legislation?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I do not think so. I was on the subcommittee that drafted the Motor Transportation Act. The railroads did not lobby against that legislation. I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will bear me out on that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know I received many protests from lake shippers and also from truckers commenting on the bill when it was under consideration.

Mr. BULWINKLE. You may have had protests from lake shippers.

Mr. HOFFMAN. From lake shippers concerning the railroad's interest against the legislation; from lake shippers and truck operators.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I have been on every transportation bill since 1930 or 1931.

Mr. PRIEST. I yield now to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I recall in the hearings a question was asked each time whether the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had passed the necessary legislation and the answer was invariably yes, but when Resolution 23 was before the Committee on Rules no witness was ever asked whether he felt a separate committee would be desirable. I wonder why that was not asked. The matter was before the House and before the Committee on Rules all of that week, and not a word was asked of any of these witnesses as to whether they thought it would be desirable.

Mr. PRIEST. I am sure that the witnesses and the industry, or any one that might desire to give information in that respect, had every opportunity to do it.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Not unless the question was first asked as the other question was.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. Yes.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Answering first the question just asked by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, I would say that the subject matter of hearings was the bill we had before us and was not the Nichols resolution, and therefore it was not appropriate to question on that. The only opportunity they could have to express their opinion of that was in the hearings conducted by the Committee on Rules, and I understand it is not the practice of the Rules Committee to hear from those on the outside. But I wish there could have been an opportunity for that question to have been a part of the hearings.

In reference to the question that was propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], I happened to be not only a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at the time that legislation was considered, but I was also a member of the subcommittee. The situation which then existed was no different from that which exists when any important legislation is being proposed and considered. A question was raised by the lake shippers as to some features of the bill as it was originally introduced, but in the final analysis the bill as reported by the committee provided adequately for the questions that had been raised by the lake shippers. I wish to go further and say that the provision that appeared in the bill had their approval, and I feel that if the gentleman from Michigan will look at the RECORD he will find that he voted in favor of the bill.

Mr. PRIEST. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one final word: I am glad, also, that the gentleman from New Jersey brought up the fact that the hearing before the committee recently was not Resolution No. 23 but was on H. R. 1012, because, as I said in the beginning, I do not believe that H. R. 1012 should be the basis for any argument in connection with Resolution 23 to come before the House tomorrow. To sum up in this last 1 minute, let us strip this question, as I stated a few moments ago, of all of those extraneous matters and look at it squarely as it is. Does there exist a committee in this House composed of trained, experienced, loyal, faithful, conscientious men to do this job of handling aviation legislation?

The only way that we can judge whether they can do it in the future is to look at the past, and when we consider that record in the past, and use it as a yardstick, there cannot be a doubt anywhere that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is capable of doing whatever job may come to it. We have not yet come to a situation where we must throw up our hands and say that the problem now is too big for the men who have been for a score of years performing such valuable service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] for 15 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I agree at the outset with my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]. I want the question of whether or not there shall be a permanent standing committee on aviation set up in this House, to be determined without extraneous matters being considered. I certainly agree with that. I want it to be set up without considering whether or not it is pleasing to one or two men in the American Federation of Labor, who should, by all the rules of the game, have their mouths closed as to the internal organization of the House of Representatives. Yes; I agree with him.

On last Thursday I made some remarks on the floor of the House directed to section 29 of House Resolution 1012, which is the section of that bill proposing amendments to existing law known as section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act. In effect, I said that if section 29 of 1012 was adopted into law that it would be contrary to the public interest and contrary to the best interests of the commercial air lines in the United States. In these remarks I also mentioned the existence of a certain contract between 16 of the major air lines and the Railway Express Agency, pointing out that, although this contract had been in existence for a number of years, it had never been approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, and stating further that the contract was an illegal contract and in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. I stated that this contract virtually gave the Railway Express Agency a monopoly on air express and that under the contract Railway Express Agency could fix the rates charged by the air lines for air express.

These statements have been challenged since that time. My purpose today is to offer you proof of the authenticity of my original statement, and proof which will refute the challenge made to them.

At the outset I want to say that when I stated that under the contract Railway Express could fix the rates charged by the air lines for air express that the word "fix" was probably a poor choice of words. Had I said that under the contract Railway Express Agency had control over the rates charged by air lines for air express I would have been absolutely correct, proof of which I shall give you further on in this statement.

I first said that Railway Express Agency, under the existing contract, had a monopoly on the air express business. Let us look now to the contract itself to ascertain whether or not this statement is correct. Although there are 16 separate contracts with 16 of the principal air lines and Railway Express Agency, the following clause is in each contract:

> The air company agrees that during the time in which operations are carried on under this contract it will not accept express business as described above or otherwise from any party other than the express company.

In other words, under the provisions of this contract not even the air lines themselves nor any other person or company can handle air express except the Railway Express Agency. One of the first provisions in each of said contracts is:

> The express company shall, subject and in accordance with the terms thereof, furnish adequate personnel and suitable equipment for the promotion, solicitation, collection, acceptance, and delivery of parcels, packages, or other air-express matter for transportation by airplane and shall use its motor vehicles, property, offices, and other facilities, and its agents and employees, in operating an air-express business as an independent contractor and not as an agent of the air company.

To strengthen Railway Express Agency's position as an independent agency, dealing in air-express transportation business, Railway Express Agency now holds a certificate of convenience and necessity from the Civil Aeronautics Board as an indirect air carrier. And incidentally Railway Express Agency is the only company in the United States so designated.

Now, let us see whether or not this monopolistic contract has in any way hampered the expansion and growth of the air lines and thus the air-express business in the United States.

I now quote a paragraph which is in every air-line Railway Express Agency contract in the United States:

> The express company agrees that in the event any other air line desires to enter into a contract with the express company to handle air express, which competes with the air company, the express company will not so contract with such competing air line unless the air company shall first give its written consent thereto or upon compliance with the following conditions.

In this connection, Grover Loaning, technical consultant, Air Cargo Plane Committee, Production Division, War Production Board, had the following to say:

> This monopolistic contract exerted a very great influence in retarding the development of air cargo carrying in the United States, so that we find ourselves today in this war emergency having to make literally frantic efforts to catch up to a position that we could have well had many years ago had this branch of the air transport industry been free and open to competitive development.

Figures from the industry for the year 1937, a normal pre-war year, show that Canadian air lines carried 26,279,156 pounds; that the T. A. C. A. operations—Central America—for the same period carried 11,346,504 pounds; whereas, the air lines of the United States carried but 4,293,456 pounds; while those in Alaska, alone, carried 2,940,757 pounds. This means that Canada, with a population of but 11,000,000 people, compared to ours of 132,000,000 people, making our population 12 times greater than that of Canada, still Canada carried 6 times as much air cargo as did the United States. Further, Central America, with a population of but 2,500,000 people, on the operation of but one air line, carried two and one-half times as much air cargo as did the United States, although our population is 60 times that of Central America. This incredibly small showing for the United States can be explained only in terms of restriction and suppression.

As might be expected, the operating costs in the various countries reflect the volume of business, and in spite of most difficult operating conditions, Canadian air lines had an average cost of 20 cents per ton-mile. T. A. C. A.—Central America—18.2 cents per ton-mile, and our domestic air lines an average of 80 cents per ton-mile.

The lesson is clear. Air lines should not be controlled by their competitors.

I also state that Railway Express Agency under existing contracts can control rates charged for air express by the air lines.

Let us once more look to the contract itself for proof of this statement. The following clause will be found in each of the contracts between Railway Express Agency and the sitxeen principal air lines of the United States:

> Provided, however, That the express company shall not be required without its consent to establish air express rates less than twice the existing first class rail express rates between the same points unless required by law.

Whether or not this is control over the rates to be charged by air lines for air express was probably more clearly expressed than I can express it in a recent public statement by: once more, Grover Loaning, technical consultant, Air Cargo Planes Committee, Production Division, War Production Board.

> Actual air express rates at the present average 80 cents a ton-mile, which is 5 to 7 times higher than railway express rates. Cargo planes can be run at about 8 to 10 cents per ton-mile. Actually railway express rates—not air express rates, but ordinary rail rates—run from 10 to 15 cents per ton-mile. Today we have proof that aircraft can carry express for less than the rate charged for express carried by the railroads if done in enough volume.

Following is another paragraph contained in each of these contracts under subdivision 8, entitled "Rates":

> The air company agrees to confer with the express company upon matters pertaining to the express rates to be charged and when any change is made in such rates, 15 days previous notice thereof shall be given by the air company to the express company, unless notice is waived in writing by the express company.

Those people who will argue and who have been arguing that this is not, first, a monopolistic contract, and, second, that proposed amendments to section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act will not legalize such contracts will point out to you that with reference to the last-quoted paragraph, if agreement is not reached, the matter will be referred to a traffic committee composed of representatives of the air lines, but herein lies one of the cutest little monopolistic jokers in the whole contract.

First. Under the contract, air express may route express traffic over whatever air line it chooses and in this connection I quote the following clause from the contract:

The express company agrees to use its best efforts to divide the traffic on a fair and equitable basis between the carriers, giving due consideration to reliability and frequency of schedules.

Second. Each air line does not have an equal vote on the traffic committee, but the value to be given to each air-line representative vote will be determined by the following formula which I quote from the contract:

Beginning with the effective date of this agreement, and of July 1, 1936, the voting power of the representative of the air company on the traffic committee shall be determined as follows:

The percentage of pound-miles of air express carried by the air company during the period from January 1, 1935, to June 30, 1935, inclusive, with respect to the total pound-miles of air express carried during such period by all companies having similar agreements with the express company shall be added to the percentage of the route-miles of the air company on the last day of such period, with respect to the total route-miles of such air companies on that day, and the total thereof shall be divided by two. The result thereof shall represent the percentage of total voting power which the representative of the air company shall have on the traffic committee for such period.

On January 1 and July 1 of each year thereafter, beginning July 1, 1936, the voting power of each member of the traffic committee shall be revised in accordance with the above formula, but determined on the basis of pound-miles of air express carried for the corresponding 6 months' period of the preceding year, and the route miles on the last day of such period.

The net result of the above is that first, Railway Express Agency gives whatever company it chooses the bulk of the air-express business, and then that the company which has the most air-express business has the largest vote on the traffic committee.

Now let us see what it is necessary for the traffic committee to do before it can reach a binding agreement. A majority of the voting power of the committee is not sufficient as the contract requires that three-fourths of the voting power must be had before final action by the committee can be arrived at. As per the following provision in the contracts:

And provided further, That the action taken at any meeting by the members having three-fourths of the voting power, as hereinafter determined, of the traffic committee, shall constitute the action of the committee and be binding upon the air company.

This now brings us to that portion of my statement wherein I say that if section 29 of H. R. 1012 were to be enacted into law, it would legalize these otherwise illegal and monopolistic contracts. Remember that these contracts have been pending before the Civil Aeronautics Board for approval for years, but have never been approved; and also remember that until they are approved they are subject to prosecution under the Sherman antitrust laws. However, if subsection (C) of section 29 of H. R. 1012 was enacted into law it is my contention that these contracts would be legalized and thus lifted from the pale of the Sherman antitrust laws.

Now let us look at the subsection (C). First, you must remember that there is but one "air carrier indirectly engaged in air transportation" and that that indirect air carrier is the Railway Express Agency, therefore subsection (C) is directed specifically at the contracts between Railway Express Agency and the 16 major air lines of the United States. I now read subsection (C):

(C) In the case of a contract or agreement between an air carrier indirectly engaged in air transportation, and an air carrier engaged directly therein affecting the terms and conditions pursuant to which the former utilizes the facilities or services of the latter, an order of disapproval under subsection (B) of this section shall, effective upon such date as may be fixed in such order, make unlawful the carrying out of such contract or agreement in the respects specified in such order.

Thus, where under existing law, the contracts are illegal or subject to the Sherman Antitrust Act until approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, if the above subsection (C) of section 29 were adopted as law, these contracts would be legal until they had been declared to be illegal by an order of disapproval issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

If any person in the House questions my interpretation of first, the provisions of the original air line Railway Express Agency contracts, or second, my interpretation of proposed section 29 in H. R. 1012, I suggest that you call Thurman Arnold, Assistant United States Attorney General, in charge of the antitrust division. And further, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to call this bill back to that Committee and before it is finally offered to the House for consideration, call Thurman Arnold and the members of his staff before their committee and question them as to their interpretation of the provisions contained in section 29.

The above was exactly the situation when I made my speech on the floor last Thursday and actually is still the situation today, except that since that time some of the airlines have reached agreement with the Railway Express Agency to delete from these contracts all that portion of the contracts with monopolistic tendencies and particularly rate fixing control. And this will continue to be the situation until these contracts with the agreed portion of them deleted has been approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, leaving in the contracts however those provisions which permit Railway Express to route air express over air lines of their own choosing, and leaves the voting power of the traffic committee in exactly the same condition as above described.

I do not mean to say that my speech had anything to do with the agreements to delete the monopolistic portions of the contracts, but the fact remains that after years of quibbling over these very provisions, only last week agreement was reached. Whether or not positive threat of prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law had anything to do with these agreements being reached, I do not know. Of this, however, I am sure: any committee of the Congress who was either so busy, or who had so little knowledge of the subject matter before it that it would report out a bill containing provisions similar to those contained in Section 29 of H. R. 1012 which are so clearly adverse to the public interest cannot do as good a job in handling legislation pertaining to civil aviation as can a committee created 100 percent for that purpose and directing its entire attention to the subject.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. LEA. Do you contend that this contract is legal or illegal at the present time?

Mr. NICHOLS. The contract before last Friday, which was the day on which the air lines and the Railway Express agreed to delete the monopolistic tendencies, was illegal. Now they have taken the monopoly out of it and I think it is legal and will be approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. LEA. But it does not assume any binding authority until it is approved by the board.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. LEA. There are two things that cannot be escaped.

Mr. NICHOLS. Just a moment. In your statement you talked about section 414. Your argument would be good if it were not for the fact that subsection C of section 29 applies specifically to one contract, and nothing else. Therefore, under all the decisions I can find, an act of Congress which is specific and special supersedes general legislation.

Mr. LEA. Now, if I can trespass upon the gentleman for just a moment, there are two questions. One is about the contract and the other is about the law. In the first place, no agreement that can be made by the air lines with the express company can oust the Civil Aeronautics Board from its jurisdiction. It has a right to make rates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 more minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. There are two fundamentals about the law. One is that no power can deprive the Civil Aeronautics Board of its right to control these rates. No agreement between the air-line carriers and the express company can deprive the Board of that right. They cannot make any contract that is controlling. Another thing that is very apparent is that the air line alone can make the rates. The express company cannot make the rates. The further fact is that the express company made a request to lower these rates. If anybody is responsible for them not being lowered it is the air lines and not the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right. I am not any more willing for the air lines to have a monopoly and be able to keep rates up than I am for the Railway Express Co. to have it.

Mr. LEA. But they do not have a monopoly. They cannot take jurisdiction from the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. NICHOLS. The fact remains that this contract has been in existence for 6 years, and it has never been approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. LEA. It has been unlawful all the time, and the Attorney General had a right to prosecute at any time during that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, may I have the right to extend my remarks, and I will answer the gentleman tomorrow? I think the gentleman has been finding a mare's nest; and if the Attorney General helped him to find it, it is that much more important.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DURHAM was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] is recognized for 15 minutes.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, the debate has been quite interesting this afternoon with reference to whether or not the Congress should even undertake to establish a standing committee on aviation.

Mr. Speaker, in ages remote, far antedating the time which memory of man can recall and since the presence of man was first noted on earth, man has been at war. On February 6, 1941, I addressed this, the greatest of deliberative assemblies, on the subject of the lend-lease bill. On this occasion I called your attention to the tragic fact that from 1496 B. C. down to that date during only 227 years of that period had the world been at peace. I stated too and I quote:

> My countrymen and my colleagues, I take the floor on this occasion to lay before you and abler minds than my own some thoughts for your patriotic, earnest, and honest consideration. Some thoughts upon which, after consideration, action must be taken. Action upon which more, in my opinion, depends concerning our future and the future of the world than in any like period in the world's history. The hand of fate has inexorably laid upon our shoulders and minds responsibilities unparalleled in the annals of history.
> Our common God has willed this test and God willing we will discharge our obligations.

And so today as we approach consideration of the Rules Committee's resolution to create a standing committee on aviation I recall the words just quoted as deeply significant and entirely applicable to the matter of forming a standing committee to consider commercial and civil aviation and its problems.

On December 17, 1903, at Kitty Hawk, N. C., Orville Wright flew an airplane powered by an engine in a straight course for 12 seconds; then Wilbur Wright took it up for a flight that lasted 30 seconds. This weird contraption of human genius was at that time but the germ of the planes of today, even as the planes of today constitute but a larval stage of the planes of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, the effective beginning of aviation and man's conquest of the air is comparatively so recent as still to be fresh in our minds, while the wars between the Medes and the Persians are so remote that we must refer to history for information thereon. The periods in which the Romans, the Goths, the Vandals, the Huns, and the Saxons roamed the world are part of the dim, distant, and remote periods in man's history. So, my colleagues, as we look ahead as through a fog it is essential that we let history shed its piercing light through the miasmic, kaleidoscopic, and whirling events which fill the world and block our vision into the future. History was young and by comparison puerile in its guiding influence during the period of the Huns, the Saxons, and the Romans. The minds of these early men were not equipped with the lessons of the ages. Yes it is true that the world was small insofar as man's then knowledge of it was concerned. These early men believed the earth to be flat, and even though in later years scientific research in many fields has proven it conclusively to be round only today is that aspect a stern reality and a part of our necessary planning for the future.

All of our essential concepts have been changed. Yes; again, even though in 1472 Leonardo Da Vinci thought and wrote about airplanes, and though in the works of Francis Bacon there was reference to the subject, and in 1617 lectures on flying were conducted by Fleyder of Tuebingen; in Italy, Borrelli, a scientist, in 1680 discussed the question on a basis of man's muscular power and reached the conclusion that this was impossible. In 1706 Sir George Cayley constructed a tiny helicopter made of gull feathers, and in 1870 Alfonse Penaud constructed two models with propellers driven by twisted rubber bands. Most of the pioneers in this research directed their attention to developing models capable of vertical flight. One hundred and fifty years ago the first voyage by air in America took place in the presence of George Washington on January 9, 1793, when Gene Pierre Blanchard ascended in a hydrogen-filled balloon. He took off from a yard at the old Walnut Street Prison in Philadelphia. He carried a passport of introduction from George Washington. This was the first airborne letter in this country. The aeronaut in his balloon reached the height of 5,812 feet. He traveled 15 miles in the elapsed time of 46 minutes and landed near Woodbury, N. J. So much for the early history.

Today the scenes are vastly changed; the world has changed; men's minds have changed; all about is change. The United States is no longer a land separated from the rest of the world by broad oceans or even miles. Today distance is figured in hours and not miles. Today we are producing in quantity standard transport airplanes that fly away with 6-ton loads and traverse 200 miles in 1 hour. Tomorrow planes will carry 100 tons at speeds of from three to four hundred miles an hour and with ranges double that of the planes of today. Such planes are already planned, and engineering is nearly complete. Post-war commercial craft will probably maintain 300 miles an hour on long runs. The distance from here to my home town will be measured by 6 hours and some minutes instead of 2,100 miles as it is measured on the ground today. Directions to remote places as of yesterday are completely destroyed. Among the truths of yesterday there is one which still stands: The shortest line between two points still is a straight line. And the nearest approach to that accomplishment on the face of the globe is the arc of the circle which begins at a given point and maintains an even elevation vertically over the earth and over a straight line from the starting point to the objective to be reached. Thinking out loud, let us compare distances and directions as between Mercator or flat maps and so-called top-of-the-world maps, those which depict the North Pole and the Arctic circle in the center. Let us for this purpose plan a flight from Frisco to Berlin. Those who think in terms of a flat map would expect to cross Missouri and continue on across the eastern coast of the United States near New York on a course a bit north of east, but the true course instead of even being close to New York would pass 1,000 miles north of Montreal and would save at least 1,000 miles in distance. This true course from Frisco to Berlin would be east of north, it would take you across Oregon, one corner of Washington, over Alberta, Canada, on north of Hudson Bay, across Baffin Island and Greenland, touching northeast Iceland, the southwest corner of Norway, and would come into Berlin from a bit west of north.

Time does not permit a full discussion and development of the new geography and the transition which has occurred in direction and distance, but I think it is safe to say that if the war ends in 2 years international air transport will in the main move at a speed of a little over 200 miles an hour and on jumps or hops of 1,000 miles or less, but there will continue to be a demand for faster and more direct service and the fast trans-Atlantic sleeper will become to the air what the Twentieth Century and Broadway Limiteds are to the rails. The comparison tomorrow will be between air transport from New York to London, as is the case today between New York and Chicago. The same kind of fast service can be provided between Chicago and Moscow. Transportation rates will drop from the current 90 cents per ton-mile to possibly 30 cents.

Under lend-lease and war operation the United States Army's Air Transport Command is operating about 70,000 miles of route, and this will increase. The A. T. C. is about to become bigger than all of the pre-war international air lines of the world combined, and we had better be thinking of the herculean expense and effort of converting the A. T. C. operations into a peacetime commercial asset. All of this must start from the center as from the hub of a wheel. This must start with a determined, intelligent, continuing, and applied effort for the development of our domestic, commercial, and civil air operations within the United States. At the end of this war the United States may easily have more transport planes, more experienced transport pilots, more trained navigators, more seasoned and trained ground crews, and a more productive and highly developed aircraft manufacturing industry than all of the other nations on earth combined, certainly much more than the United Nations combined. Much labor and much thought intelligently combined and applied are essential before the question as to where these pilots will be permitted to fly their equipment can be determined. This field leads into diplomatic, political, legislative, legal, and military problems. For the purpose of this discussion we need no concept of the manner in which we, the United Nations, and Russia may undertake to police the world after the war. There may be some overlapping involvement in results, schools of thought which adhere to each country's determination to hold to its own sphere of interest and security, and the school of international and global thinkers will, of course, give expression to the results of their cogitation. But in any and all events military aviation as an immediate aftermath will form an essential part, and the location of strategically situated bases will play a prominent part. The question of the standing committee will only by indirection be affected by these considerations. Aviation in these phases, manufacturing, transport, and private flying will furnish us the hub, the backlog, for these continued and successful operations.

I am not one of those who believe that aviation should hold up its hands as a supplicant to government and plead that as a master magician the Government will guarantee success in the post-war world to come. Under our system, a free system, we can expect, however, the guaranty by Government to the people and to private enterprise of the fruition of opportunity to achieve success by competitive effort and ingenuity, and further, to individuals and to groups, to reap the fairly earned and merited award of patriotic and successful enterprise. Today's aircraft are at the same time the most destructive product of human genius and at once the most vital to world reconstruction and to the accomplishment of that Christian and vital goal, a lasting peace. Today the production, the operation, and the utilization of battlecraft of the air will decide the outcome of the war in a major degree. From today on, the winning of the peace together with the carrying on of the war will depend in a major degree upon how well we work and think. There should be no abridgment in any degree of the efforts of the Congress to do its share with respect to this major segment of the world's problems and the part our problems play as an integer thereof. There must be no conflict between other matters of importance in the efforts which the Congress must make to plan the future of and to solve the problems which confront commercial and civil aviation.

We must not be influenced by appeals for a meticulous adherence to procedures and organization which served well in the past but we must accept the challenge and react thereto in kind and in the spirit and tempo of the times. Commercial and civil aviation of today are merging rapidly with tomorrow's age, and the problems of yesterday are as pygmies compared to giants when juxtaposed with those of tomorrow.

Operations, air-traffic control, minimum requirements for airports, insurance, contact flight rules, flight plan rules, transcontinental operations, pilot rules, control of the air over continental United States, policies connected therewith, aids to navigation including weather forecasts, and so forth, together with objects projecting up into the air space, zoning requirements, authority of control-tower operators, equipment in such towers, and so forth, make up but a small part of the development of domestic and civil aviation and their problems. Upon how well we work and upon the results of our labor depends much more than is indicated on the surface. The day is not far distant when uniformity of air rules of all kinds, together with operations will become vital to international intercourse by air.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. If that is agreeable to the other Members who have special orders, without objection it is so ordered.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman feel that our rights and privileges in the bases that have been constructed under Lend Lease in foreign countries should be maintained?

Mr. KLEBERG. I should think so, and there is nothing I have said that would indicate to the contrary.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And the protection should be legislative if necessary.

Mr. KLEBERG. I imagine so.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is not being done at the present time.

Mr. KLEBERG. This Congress and this body by omnipotent decree are charged with a responsibility which beggars measurement and description. The United States of America has been and is the hope of the world leading to the realization of final, lasting, and constructive peace, if possible. Young Americans fighting in far-flung lands are fighting to maintain the guaranties which we are pledged to preserve. The United States is more than the arsenal of democracy today; it is the only hope of a war-torn world to maintain such freedom as may exist in small spots thereof and to gain back for those who have lost it that priceless adjunct of life, and to provide it for uncounted millions who have never experienced it before.

When the proposal to form a standing committee as part of the organization of the House of Representatives reaches this floor, we who are the voice of the people will decide upon a question so momentous that upon our decision may well depend the answer to the question, Did they die in vain? The rapid development of air transportation in the immediate past and the vital part it plays in the decision in this, the greatest of all struggles, and the yes or no to whether this mass malignity will again beset the world will depend upon our action; yes, and more too. The place our country will occupy and its position among the nations of the world hinges upon our vote on this question. To those young Americans who have pledged their lives and sacred honor in the defense of their country our action means much. It means so much more than much that I hesitate to think we might not in the discharge of our obligations successfully meet and overcome the opposition of those who oppose the creation of a standing committee. I cannot believe this will happen. This citadel of representative democracy and freemen cannot long survive our failure to lay the foundation upon which our future place in the world is to be builded. This future place and its permanency will depend upon the basic arrangements made by the victor governments. Air transport has become an agent or instrument of State policy in every important nation except the United States. Before the war all the other nations were represented in international air transport by either partly or wholly owned monopolies created by their respective governments. Our only partial monopoly, Pan American, did extremely well despite its nongovernmental status. The development of our prestige at home when the vexatious questions of international air policies will be discussed between our State Department and diplomats and those of other lands may well depend upon what we have to offer when that time comes. Within the executive branch the President's interdepartmental committee has been established to discuss and study this whole question. If I know the people of the United States they will expect their Representatives and their voice in the halls of state to speak with full information and knowledge of what goes on. If we do not have practical plans and pursue them with typical American genius and determination we shall have failed in our trust. It has been shown that the American people and we as the Representatives in the Congress have a vital and enormous stake in the success of the American aviation industry after the war. This success will depend in a large measure upon the assurance by the Government of the continuation of a free system of society and economy and therefore a strong, free, privately owned and operated industry. All phases of this industry, international air transport, domestic air transport, private flying, and aircraft manufacturing are interdependent for success and the security of our country. You must remember that the aircraft industry is different from other older industries with regard to its need in preparing for the post-war period. The people of the United States through this body and the Congress and by our action can assure them that the aviation industry shall have the opportunity to succeed in the post-war period. Congress is now charged with the setting up of a committee to study, make research and, when necessary, pass legislation on the specific problems which are peculiar to the American aviation industry and penultimately vital to the well-being of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I have not in my heart or mind the desire to criticize the committee now charged with this responsibility but I must and do state with deep conviction that this committee with the multitude of important matters over which it has jurisdiction does not have the time to give to this vital question. This is the crux of the whole matter. A statement which has been couched in various forms has been made ad lib on numerous occasions that the House or the Congress has too many committees. This may be true in some conceptions of the matter but it can have no possible weight or bearing upon this specific question. Upon how we handle the development of commercial and civil aviation here at home depends in no small part the future of all branches of aviation. This is the nucleus, this is the backlog, and upon this depends many things, among them our position with reference to the trade routes of the world and their effect upon the direction of civilization. By indirection, but intimately and indivisibly connected therewith, is involved also our prestige and place at the peace table, and last but not least, the final multiplied impact of what might be our failure to grasp vital opportunity by the forelock for the welfare of the United States of America and the consequent well-being of the rest of the world. Surely, there cannot be such a degree of pride in committee prestige, or fealty to long established custom in the minds of a majority of the House as to blight our efforts to make secure our future.

Mr. Speaker, it is true, I confess with reluctance, that feeling in this matter has reached such a high pitch. I regret to note the evidences of unusual activity in the mustering of support for the maintenance of a status quo which comes from the outside. This pressure had, of course, to originate from within. But be that as it may, and without malice or ill will toward any person, but purely because of my devotion to my country and its well-being, and with all of the emphasis which I can muster and put forth, I urge the creation of a standing Committee on Commercial and Civil Aviation set forth in the resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and give the reasons why, in my opinion, a special committee on aviation should not be established.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include a telegram from the Airline Pilots' Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE RUML PLAN

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor this afternoon to relieve my own mind. I have had so many letters relating to the Ruml plan that I have given it a good deal of study and think I have reached a decision. I hope this decision will reach my constituents so it may possibly serve to assure them that I do not need so many letters.

I trust I shall not have to change my mind as time goes along. I came across a little bit of advice lately, and I want to give it to you in the hope it may be helpful to you also. It runs something like this: "Never shift your mouth into high gear until you are sure your brain is turning over." I really feel now that I have followed this injunction as far as this Ruml plan is concerned. I recently received a letter telling me that I was sitting on the fence. My reply was that I might possibly be sitting on the fence, but I was not keeping my ear to the ground, because that posture would be so difficult. But I am extremely anxious that my people know how I stand relating to this matter. I will be glad to give half my time to the House. I hope I bait you to ask questions. However, let me roam a little while at random, because this plan of taxation is tied up somewhat with other matters, particularly inflation. We are largely relying now on price control to prevent inflation, but price control is blowing up rather badly, I am sorry to say. We are not paying much attention to monetary control, and this taxation matter is perhaps the most important phase of the inflation problem.

The Ruml plan is hailed with delight by many of my people. They may not fully understand it, but they think they do, and they inform me that it is very simple and that we are just trying to put obstructions in the way and purposely finding imaginary difficulties in its transition process. I have perused the long addresses made before the committee and tried to weigh the evidence. I have read a long statement from the Secretary of the Treasury, as represented by Mr. Paul. After several days of thinking over the problem I have come to this conclusion: I voted for prohibition some time ago; my people wanted me to. Afterward they wanted to repeal it; I voted to repeal it. They now want me to vote for the Ruml plan, and they seem tc be unanimous about it. My suggestions as to its disabilities fall upon deaf ears. Even large organizations like the New England Council and some Rotary Clubs have carefully scanned my suggestions, and call them worthless. Therefore, I have about decided to vote for the Ruml plan. Let it not be said that I am not responsive to the wishes of a large majority of my people on a matter they clair fully to understand. I would fail them, however, if I did not warn them of some dangers. They tell me it is simply like setting the clock ahead, as in daylight saving. That, indeed, would be simple if that was the only effect of it.

Mr. Ruml tried to tell the committee that, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] would not be convinced. I read and reread Mr. CRAWFORD'S statement. He seemed to stagger the Committee on Ways and Means so that they themselves did not know how to pursue the subject further at the moment.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] took the floor and interested and somewhat convinced most of us. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] did likewise. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] also made comments. But those speeches have been too few compared with the national interest in this matter.

Taxation affects all of us and increasingly so. We should give this new plan careful thought. It is certainly revolutionary. The gentleman from Michigan told us that we have forty-seven billion of demand deposits; twenty-six billion of time deposits, and that we have cashable United States bonds amounting to about seventeen billions, and therefore, must be able to pay the taxes now due.

He did not wish to cancel this accrued indebtedness. He called that "economic blasphemy." Some time in the future he will have many followers, no doubt. I sit next to him day in and day out on the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I have a high regard for him, knowing that he knows far more than I about financial matters.

But I must ask myself if I properly represent my people if I follow him in his viewpoint. But he fully supports some "pay-as-you-go plan." So do I. We agree on that. But the gentleman from Michigan says we should collect the 1942 taxes from all those who have the ability to pay. I think he will agree that we should not be harsh with those who do not now have the ability to pay. He argues that we should collect what we could without hardship to those who find themselves unable to pay.

Mr. Ruml claims that the majority of people do not save to pay taxes. That is an indictment against our people which I do not want to make. It may be true, but it is not flattering to my constituents if they are included in that class. Perhaps the people did not know until last October exactly how much their taxes would be increased this year, but they certainly knew they were to be greatly increased. I know a great many people like myself "put their money in a pocket which is often full of holes." Mr. Ruml ridicules the administrative claims that the administering of the plan would be difficult. The Treasury Department sent me a long statement that I have here outlining very many serious difficulties. I, for one, would like to live in America a little while longer, although I seem to have been living outside of it for the last few years. Honestly, I hate to think that somebody is going to forcibly take away my salary before I get it. I would like to have it and make a voluntary payment of taxes. This forcible taking may be necessary in wartime, but if we begin we will have to keep it up until the judgment day, because if we at some time attempted to go back to the old way, we would find it probably impossible. If we should try to go back, the Treasury would have no money that year. Let us not forget that. There may come a month when my neighbor has misfortune. He would not like his employer to deduct for that month; he would need it. Some other neighbor the next month may have the same experience. Gradually all my neighbors may suffer this experience, and they might want me to repeal this law. It will be too late to retrace our steps.

This taking away violently before you get it, is hardly the American way. It would not be quite a free country. Many of you argue that this method is necessary because the great majority of people do not know how to take care of their money and we must grab it off to be sure we will get it. You may tell my people that if you want to. I might have the feeling that you are perhaps right in believing this, but I am not ready to indict my constituents as a shiftless people and unfit to receive their pay because they are not to be trusted to pay their taxes voluntarily.

I read the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and I rather agreed with him as most of you seemingly did. Finally he found difficulties in the so-called windfall problem and he decided to suggest that we should take the 1942 or 1943 income, whichever was the higher, and pay the 1943 tax on that basis. That seemed to solve one of the problems and for a time I was comforted. Suddenly and provokingly it came over me that that was not the real solution to prevent the so-called windfall. The man who had a salary of a hundred thousand dollars last year and saved up to pay his taxes, could say, "It does not matter to me. You can take either year and I can be satisfied." So I was a little unhappy because I had thought the gentleman's suggestion had solved that phase of the vexatious question.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], said it would not make any difference to 75 percent of the taxpayers, as they would notice no difference. That is true, and this plan only applies to salaries and wages, it is said. The Treasury warns:

> We will have to make arbitrary rules for all employers to follow in taking away part of the salary from each and every one of their employees.

Some have two children, some are married, some unmarried, and some have other exemptions. You must take away each month, the Treasury says, what may be proper to take, having fully in mind each taxpayer separately according to his exemptions. The employer is to be the collection agency. The employer of 2,000 people or more will have a large bookkeeping establishment added to his office force. The Treasury Department should like this, because the employer will be forced to be the collection agency.

But does the Ruml plan apply only to salaries and wages? What about the farmer who has one crop a year; when is he going to pay? The Treasury says that he must make and file returns, and at least quarterly. You cannot take any money away from the farmer each month or even quarterly when he needs it all to raise his crop. He gets paid only at the end of the year, at which time he may figure out exactly what he may have to pay. Do not turn this problem away as being unimportant. It is very important. There is the real-estate operator, the insurance man, the men who are not salaried people, who make commission or profit at only fortunate times, but must estimate the year before how much they might possibly have to pay. They would be totally unable to do this and payments might become due at their most inconvenient moment. Take it away from him monthly when he has not received it. Cannot we wait until he has come into possession? We must do so if "pay as you go" means anything.

But after all "it is so simple."

The Treasury thinks it very complicated. They ought to know. Am I so dumb with all the training I have had in legislation, that I am so ignorant that I cannot understand, "a la Harry Hopkins"? Anyway I have read these objections, I have thought about them. I can see complications in plenty, unhappiness when payments are forcibly taken in months greatly needed and I am wondering if it is not a very un-American thing to do. But Ruml says, "If you forgive one you ought to forgive all," that that is the American thing to do. Perhaps I ought to agree to that. He also agrees that we should have some provision in the bill to prevent windfalls and has suggested such provision. Do his followers know that he desires to prevent windfalls? From my letters I doubt that he has stressed that.

I may have some friends who have money in their pockets to pay large taxes that they were supposed to pay this year. If you pass this plan they can now spend it, because the Government will forcibly take the 1943 tax payments away from that year's salary. They need not use the money they have saved for that purpose. Is that an inflation check? No, and that is what the gentleman from Michigan may be worrying about. It is another inflation impetus. Taxation must be the principal check on inflation. As I have read somewhere, "taxation must take the steam out of the boiler," so that we may proceed safely. We will have $15,000,000,000 of money on rampage after all taxes are paid this year, even after you have forced savings for taxes, lest our people spend it and add to the inflation hazard. We are bidding up and up for the goods that are now available.

We have heard about the black market this afternoon If someone will tell me as a legislator what I can do to stop the bootlegger, please tell me. We graduated a large school of bootleggers during prohibition days. They are well versed in the business and they can teach an army of others how to do it. Rum itself was even outlawed in those days. Meat is not outlawed. How can you reach the individual who kills and sells to his neighbors without going through the wholesale and retail trade store? If you did catch them, the jails would not be large enough. The fines would be unpopular. Our people will have meat if it is to be had.

We are a people that can be led if we understand the need, but we cannot be driven, even by bureaucrats. We are a democracy. A democracy can succeed only where our people are educated. I have to claim we are at least partially educated. Therefore, we do not believe everything the bureaucrats tell us. We are able to weigh matters. We recognize too much bungling in our bureaucratic Government. Yes, it may be easy to say we can lick inflation if we want to. Canada, it is said, has overcome it, with her 11,000,000 people. Great Britain has largely overcome it, with 41,000,000 people. But it is not so easy for us with 130,000,000 people.

As I questioned earlier in the day, why, because we observed Lent in March in Boston, and therefore the meat price was low, should the O. P. A. have not recognized this condition and fixed price ceilings fairly? We might be led to think they did not pay much attention to Lent in Los Angeles, because they gave them a higher ceiling price. I read that one wholesaler in Boston lost $800 on one carload of meat last week. Why should he try to get beef for his customers? Must our people be forced to actually rely on bootleggers?

We cannot make too arbitrary rules. We must have broad rules that allow relief in almost each particular case. Similarly, under the Ruml plan, that month when the man should not have his money taken from his salary, the rule should provide relief. I often claim that the exception proves the value of the rule. It is no good unless it can stand exceptions. If the exceptions get too many, change the rule. But these bureaucrats here in the O. P. A. must make rules and blindly follow them. Many of them know little of their problems. Our delegation had to meet the other day and unanimously demand that the food administrator in New England be removed from office. It seems he has no qualifications for such a job so vital to our people.

How can a public have faith and be willing to obey the law under these conditions? They cannot. I worry about the psychology of our people. Unless this psychology is carefully studied and weighed these laws and regulations will certainly fail in their purpose. Contrast the demands of labor. You have an administration seemingly absolutely throttled and controlled by labor and a Congress absolutely controlled by the farmer vote.

Here we have an executive and a legislative branch separated. In England you have a Parliament with the Cabinet as part of it, working absolutely together on every question. The psychology of the people of Great Britain, where 40 percent of the people are working on war contracts, where they have had such terrible bombings and suffering, and every day expecting more dreadful ones to come, is not like ours. We do not believe, apparently, that we are to have any bombings. We cannot feel the immediate need. We have to resort to high wages and overtime pay in order to get the work done.

No, the psychology is nothing like Great Britain's. Do not let us compare it too favorably. But the psychology of a democracy like ours is highly important.

In Great Britain the men work 65 hours a week, the women 55. After 48 hours they get one-fourth overtime for the next 2 hours and after that one-half. Here we get time and a half after 40, and the average week here is not 55 or 65 hours, it is 45.

Conditions over there are indeed different; the psychology is very different. True, over there they have a $24,000 limitation on salaries. Our President has suggested we ought to have a $25,000 limitation. Well, we got away from their viewpoint a long time ago. Of course, it is now reaching similarity. But they are still, I hope, a democracy.

I am opposed to the $25,000 limitation because I come from a part of the country—not like Los Angeles—but a district where we entertain summer people who come with money. About all my people work for people who must generally have to have a salary of more than $25,000. Limit those people and we would be out of a job. So, if I properly represent my people, I would never think of limiting a man's salary to $25,000. Then, again, I do not greatly worry about who may have more than $25,000 that we can take from them so easily.

Personally, "I only ask the slightest break—a few more cents than taxes take." I am then satisfied. Have not I said anything yet tart enough to provoke somebody to ask me a question? Are you all in full agreement with me? Is the Ruml plan simple or is it not?

Mrs. LUCE. Has the gentleman any formula to prevent a fool from losing his money?

Mr. GIFFORD. To prevent a fool from losing his money? Oh, a fool and his money are invited places. I do not know how anybody could prevent him from accepting the invitations. I know I would not refuse if the gentlewoman invited me to go places. I could perhaps not be regarded as a fool, however, in that instance. No wise man could resist it. The fool when he travels and has money, is then called a tourist.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand the Ruml approach, it is to the effect that we file a tentative return, and then a final return, and then join that with the statistics of the Treasury Department, and we now have 44,000,000 taxpayers.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That means to me, to say the least, that there must be filed some 88,000,000 individual tax calculations, which somebody must audit.

Mr. GIFFORD. It would seem so. But does the gentleman remember that it was said in one of the hearings that both returns could be made on the one sheet, or the one return blank?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the reason that I say there must be 88,000,000 individual tax calculations, because on that final return, which is the original return for the next year, there must be two sets of calculations.

Mr. GIFFORD. The Treasury has to take the burden of that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In addition to that, if we have our industrial concerns withholding the taxes on some 39,000,000 nonagricultural pay roll payees, and they are now on the pay roll, it means that those industrial concerns, as the gentleman said, must maintain expanded bookkeeping departments and a statistical personnel to prepare those withholding returns and send those into the Treasury. That means another thirty-five or forty million more returns which somebody must audit. So, as we explore all these possibilities. we should have in mind at least, it appears to me, that the Internal Revenue Bureau will perhaps prove to be the largest bureau we have in the Government service. I think that is probably the way we are headed. One other question bothers me very much and it has developed within the last 10 days. That is to the effect that big industry, prime contract holders, Government contracts, are now proposing some new service, that if a withholding tax is assessed, that industry and organized labor will band together in asking for an increase in wages sufficient to cover the withholding tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course they will—why not you and I do the same thing.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any carefully thought-out plan as to how we can raise taxes?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; there are a number of ways.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the other Members would like to have the gentleman state them.

Mr. GIFFORD. I pay about $32 per thousand on real estate that has no returns. People with bonds and stocks do not pay a cent. Why not explore that?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Why not tell us what they are? Perhaps we might like it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I would suggest many things.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman state them in the revision of his remarks?

Mr. GIFFORD. And make those suggestions then?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I should include a sales tax, stamp taxes, and many unpopular devices. We must find the money somehow.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Just one moment. Before I forget it—my time is now short—I wish to repeat: Price control is not enough. We must have money control; we must have labor control. We cannot sit on a one-legged or two-legged stool; three legs are necessary.

Until you have those controls I am willing to go along with the farmer and see that he gets a fair price. Until control is extended elsewhere also I have reluctantly made up my mind that the farmer should have a reasonable price, in spite of the danger that impends. Certainly labor has been coddled. I hate to come to that decision. But I cannot listen to the threats of labor that "If we pay any more for food we will demand a still higher wage." They got there first and now do not welcome others. It is no use putting up an umbrella any longer that is full of holes. This country has been going on the last 7 or 8 years in this fashion. "The rain is supposed to fall equally upon the just and the unjust, but it falls more on the just, because the unjust have stolen the just's umbrella." That is what has been happening.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. After the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], and the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, we can understand now why we need 241,000 desks that the purchasing agent told the gentleman from Massachusetts about the other day.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. It is indeed now understandable.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman has made an excellent statement on this question. It is a difficult problem. I think everyone who studies it runs into the difficulties the gentleman mentions.

Mr. GIFFORD. Right there I want to ask you, Should my people at home, after baring my breast upon this subject, think that I am too dumb to understand it?

Mr. CARLSON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will tell them you said that.

Mr. CARLSON. You just led into some avenues that need further explanation. When we come to the administrative difficulties let us not forget that we have millions of social-security accounts that are kept in this Nation. They report weekly and monthly. I, for one, agree with the gentleman from Michigan. I did not think we could keep them; but they seem to be doing very well with it. Now, there is just one issue. Is this Nation concerned enough about getting people out of tax debt and the Nation in a place where it is not threatened with insolvency when we shift 30,000,000 people, 20,000,000 in industry and 10,000,000 in the Army, from wartime to peacetime? Those people who will be in tax debt, on higher wages, will be liable for income taxes out of unemployment compensation checks. That is what concerns me. The gentleman is correct. He has presented some good problems.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to take the time, but I do not have it, to tell you the good things about the Ruml plan. There are many. It will relieve the distress of those people who are called upon to pay this year and have not the cash, and they will not have a tax debt hovering over them. They will have to pay this year, and if the plan is adopted they will notice little difference except they will have lost control of their own earnings to perhaps 20 percent. But those who have saved in these Army camps near me; those who have held money back to pay taxes can now be relieved and can spend it. It might make them happy. In a way it would be a windfall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield to permit me to correct the RECORD?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want the RECORD to stand as showing the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] attributed to me, if I understood him, that I feel these records cannot be kept. I have had a great deal of experience in keeping records. I love to keep records, and I enjoy records that are beautifully kept. I think we can keep the records, but it requires manpower to do it, both in the offices of industry and in the offices of Government. So I simply do not want the RECORD to show that I do not believe those records cannot be kept. They can be kept, but I question the advisability of some of these records, and I would suggest this remedy, that if we are to withhold the tax at the source, then make it unnecessary for all those who received $2,500 or less of income to file a return, and let the fellow who scales them make a return to the Government and get rid of about fifty or seventy-five million returns.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman.

Now, I want to read you something before I finish, this from a very experienced and able economist whom my people trust:

> All of this talk by Treasury spokesmen and Congressmen about revenue to the Government being lost if the Ruml plan is adopted is just so much buncombe and they must know it. One cannot conceive that Treasury tax experts and members of the Ways and Means Committee are as stupid as they are trying to appear.
> Each person has to pay a certain percentage of his income to the Federal Government in the form of taxes. What possible difference can it make to the financial receipts of the Government whether the payments made in 1943 be considered as payments of taxes on 1942 incomes or on 1943 incomes. Subject to minor adjustments the Government gets the same amount of money.

There is some basis for his saying that. The Treasury made a mistake in saying we would lose $10,000,000,000 in the first instance.

> It is just exactly as sensible as arguing that daylight saving shortens the length of a day.
> What the Treasury is obviously trying to do is to work up some scheme by which the low-income groups which comprise the bulk of the voters in the country are put on a current year income tax basis while people with larger incomes are soaked for 2 years taxes in 1 year. This is on a par with the political ethics of the New Deal.

There is a feeling on the part of the Treasury that they should select those whom they think are able to pay and forgive or forget the rest. Is that equality of treatment and good American policy?

The atmosphere presses equally on all of us. Taxes, they used to say, should be placed on us in the same manner—equally and proportionately, but we have gone far away from the words "proportionately" and "reasonably." Taxes are no longer imposed in that manner.

I perhaps feel better now that I have talked about this matter. There have been seemingly so many in full agreement. I simply got to the point where I could not keep an open mind any longer. Fellows who keep an open mind too long had better beware lest only a draft blow through it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include a report from the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE PRODUCTION OF FOOD AND FIBER

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, let it be understood clearly that I do not pretend to have prophetic vision, neither do I think it serves any useful purpose for us to be constantly saying "I told you so."

At the outset, however, what I shall have to say is for the purpose of the record, and in view of the fact that those of us in and out of Congress who are especially charged with the responsibility of the program for agriculture and in our endeavor to see that the American farmer is given all the assistance, help, and every encouragement possible in his gigantic task to produce the necessary food and fiber to feed and clothe our armies and our civilian population; I want to briefly refer to some remarks I made in April 1941, almost 2 years ago. The remarks at that time were provoked by a statement of Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, which he made in connections with a Budget recommendation and referred to the items having to do with agriculture as nondefense items. On that occasion, among other things, I said, and I quote:

> Today neither the press, the public, nor anyone else seems to be concerned about the farmer's place in the national defense program. We are building battleships, tanks, airplanes, and bombers, and all the instruments of modern warfare to the tune of billions for the defense program, and yet, as I say, no one seems to be concerned about the place the farmer is to have in the program. I am afraid it is due to the fact that because of the huge, so-called surpluses of wheat, cotton, and a few other farm commodities that everyone thinks America has an abundance of foodstuffs sufficient to feed the world indefinitely.
> We must remember that the condition of the American farmer is much different than it was in 1917 and 1918, and I am afraid too many of us do not realize just what may be ahead.
> Yes, we are hearing a great deal about munitions, airplanes, and battleships, and I yield to no one in my desire for the strengthening of our defense program in every particular. But, after all, there will be no mass production unless there is plenty to eat. An army always "marches on its stomach," and our soldiers must be fed even though citizens are in want.

I predict that if agriculture is not reckoned with in this huge defense program (and remember, it was presumably only a defense program at that time) more quickly than many of us now realize, there will be concern about the food program and there will be a rude awakening for those who think agriculture is not important in this program.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Morgenthau was not the only one in high officialdom who apparently did not consider agriculture as an essential defense industry, and even after Pearl Harbor as an essential war industry. It was months after Pearl Harbor before agriculture was considered as an essential matter in the selection of an army. Agriculture workers were classified by selective service as nonessentials long after Pearl Harbor, and it was only a few months ago—to be exact, about November 1, 1942—before agriculture was given a classification as an essential war industry.

More than a year ago the Agriculture Committee of the House—of which committee I have the honor to be a member—called General Hershey and others before the committee and told them of the plight of the American farmer, particularly with reference to his inability to obtain adequate machinery and repairs and skilled or even ordinary farm labor; that this labor shortage was not only imminent but real. General Hershey was apparently sympathetic, but could not or at least did not do much about it.

With the progressive difficulties which the producers of the country found themselves in and were having in getting farm machinery and equipment as well as labor, the House Agriculture Committee last summer again held hearings for several weeks, endeavoring to get something done. We again called Secretary Wickard; General Hershey; Mr. McNutt, Chairman of the War Manpower Board; and Mr. Donald Nelson, at the head of W. P. B. We spent several days urging that some concrete program be worked out, that something definite be done, and done quickly, to get more equipment to the farmers, and that something be done, and done quickly, that would stop the exodus of skilled manpower from the farms.

Mr. Speaker, on October 12, 1942, while these hearings were still in progress, I made certain suggestions to General Hershey which I put in the record as of that date. I call your attention to them:

I therefore suggest and urge that General Hershey, Director of Selective Service, in conjunction with the manpower board and the Department of Agriculture, take immediate steps to assist in stopping this exodus from the farms, and that the following directive be made effective at once:

That all persons affected by the Selective Service Act not already inducted into the armed forces, whose chief occupation for the past 3 years has been that of a farm operator or farm laborer, as disclosed by their respective questionnaires, be temporarily deferred and positive instructions be given to the local boards to make such temporary deferment. Pending such temporary deferment said local boards refrain from inducting any of such persons pending a reclassification of those farm operators and farm laborers engaged in the production of essential food and fiber for our war effort.

That the further following steps be taken just as speedily as possible:

(a) An immediate survey be made by the Selective Service in conjunction with the Manpower Board and the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of determining the amount of experienced and skilled farm operators and farm laborers available in the continental United States.

(b) That a survey be made by the Selective Service in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture as to the necessary amount of farm manpower essential to carry on the food and fiber victory program.

(c) That all persons found to be engaged in agricultural pursuits deemed essential to the war effort, and whose chief occupation has been that of farm operators or farm laborers for the past 3 years, be permanently deferred from induction in the armed forces so long as they engage themselves in essential agricultural pursuits.

(d) That farm organizations or representative farmers be given equal representation on all of the agencies dealing with manpower or priorities, heretofore or hereafter created for the purpose of prosecuting the war.

(e) That adequate publicity be given to the part the farmer has had and is having in the war program, and that such publicity be especially emphasized in the rural communities through the weekly newspapers and otherwise, to the effect that food and fiber is just as essential to the war effort as the worker in a defense plant, and that producing necessary food and fiber is just as patriotic as serving in the armed forces.

(f) That the Selective Service Administrator be explicit and firm in his instructions to the local boards, in emphasizing the necessity for keeping the experienced farmer and farm laborer on the farms and ranches necessary to the program to produce food and fiber essential to the prosecution of the war.

Immediately that the hearings before our committee were completed, a subcommittee of the full Committee on Agriculture, comprised of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], and myself, together with Mr. Coffee of Nebraska, who was then a member of our committee, drafted a report and recommendations which were approved by the whole committee and copies were sent to Secretary Wickard, General Hershey, and Mr. Nelson, and which report appears in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page A3704.

I shall quote briefly a few paragraphs from this report:

1. We recommend that directives be issued immediately to local draft boards to place in deferred classifications men essentially engaged in the production of vital food and fiber supplies.

2. Our investigation discloses that the greatest exodus of workers from the farm has been caused by the inducement of high industrial wages. No one can expect a worker to stay on the farm at a wage of $30 to $60 per month when he can receive as much as $100 per week or more in an industrial plant or on a defense project. Ceilings on farm commodity prices prohibit any substantial increase in farm wage rates. The Government pays the bill for industrial production and we observe that the War Labor Board is daily adjusting industrial wages upward. Either farm prices must be raised so that the farmers can compete in this labor market or else industrial wages must be brought to the same comparative level of farm wages.

3. We are convinced that the various agencies connected with the war effort have not shown proper appreciation of the importance of agriculture in winning the war. When requests have been made for materials for the manufacture of farm machinery, the reply has always been that such materials were needed for war production. The time has come when these agencies should recognize that necessary food and fiber is war production, and now that the shortage of labor has become so acute, immediate provision should be made for supplying the farmers of the Nation with necessary farm equipment, machinery, and repair parts.

4. Our committee was astonished to learn that, up to date, there has been no comprehensive survey of the manpower of this Nation and of the requirements to successfully carry on the war. We strongly recommend:

(1) That a definite determination be made as to (a) the total number of armed forces which the manpower and industry of this Nation can support and sustain, (b) the able-bodied manpower needed to support such armed forces and civilian population, and (c) the manpower available for such purposes;

(2) That all needs be rated according to their respective importance for the winning of the war;

(3) That an appropriate priority system be established for the allocation of the available supply of manpower.

5. The farmers in every part of the Nation do not know how to plan for 1943 crops. Contracts must be made, material must be secured, fertilizers must be bought, seed must be ordered, months in advance. Utter confusion exists today on every farm, every ranch, every dairy. We appeal to the President and the several administrative agencies to act and act now, so the farmers may know whether to plan and how to plan.

6. Price ceilings can protect the consumer only so long as there is something to price. They may easily and quickly bring about such shortages that supply will be many times more important than price. We, therefore, recommend that minimum prices be fixed and ceilings be adjusted so as to encourage abundant production. Very little rationing of farm commodities will be necessary if the producers are encouraged, and they should not be required to produce at a loss.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think the record shows your Committee on Agriculture in the House has been on the alert. But even so, that will not satisfy bare backs and hungry bellies.

The fact that Mr. WALLACE and Mr. Wickard, and many others in high places said there was plenty of food for all and that rationing of any appreciable amount of foodstuffs would not be necessary; as was pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] the other day, is of no consolation now. Rationing is here, and no one should complain about that, if that is what it takes to feed our boys over there and everywhere, and our workers who are turning out the arms and munitions for them to do the job.

What we need to be alarmed about is not the rationing particularly, but that there may be something to ration. Let us look at this picture—I am afraid some of us do not realize just how big an assignment we have given the American farmer in this job of furnishing food and fiber. Let us see what we are demanding of him.

We have a population in this country, in round numbers, of 130,000,000 people. The farm population, that is, people who actually reside on the farms, is now estimated to be 29,048,000. The Department of Agriculture has subdivided into three categories, into numbers, those who must do the job of producing the food. In making these calculations, they say there are 2,035,000 full-time hired workers on the farms of this Nation. At certain seasons of the year considerable in excess of that number were necessarily employed on the farms; but in reducing that number to year-round full-time employment the 2,035,000 was estimated as the full-time hired workers in producing the crops of 1942.

Second, we have the farm operators. This term is intended to cover the man who lives on the farm, manages the farm, works on the farm, and in most cases works in the fields planting, cultivating, and harvesting the crops. Upon him rests the responsibility of producing the crops to feed the Nation without regard to seasons, weather, or hours. The Department of Agriculture estimates this number to be 5,140,000 full-time operators engaged in farm production.

Third, this category contained in the classification is known as the family worker. For the crop year 1942 these family workers were estimated at 1,250,000. This, mind you, covers the number of family workers reduced to a year-round, all-time basis, who devote their time and their brawn to producing.

To recapitulate, we have:

|---|---|
| Hired workers | 2,035,000 |
| Operators | 5,140,000 |
| Family workers | 1,250,000 |
| Total | 8,425,000 |

Now what does this mean? It means that this comparative handful of people of 8,425,000 must not only produce the food and fiber to sustain themselves and the remaining 20,623,000 members of their own families, but also an army and a navy totaling over 10,000,000 at the present time; also the 17,500,000 engaged in war production, and the 21,300,000 who labor in the mines and factories of the Nation, and in addition some 200,000 who are engaged in disseminating news by press and radio. Likewise the remaining 57,000,000 (including several million Government employees) of our civilian population.

Then in addition to all of this, they are expected to supply the food for millions and untold millions of those allied with us in the war, and millions in the conquered countries which we must feed immediately following their liberation.

Think of it—just 8,425,000 to do this job. And yet, day after day, we hear news commentators in the press and over the radio, referring to this group of men and women as a group of greedy hogs, solely responsible for high prices, entirely chargeable with inflation.

Well, what are we to do about it?

I fully realize and appreciate that much of the damage has already been done, as far as securing labor is concerned. The draft, and industry with its attractive high wages, has already tremendously crippled the skilled farm labor supply. We can and must, however, save from the wreck what is left, and do so now. We must see to it—

First. That no more bona fide farmers or farm laborers are inducted into military service so long as they engage in agriculture.

Second. I think we should immediately release and discharge where it can be done without serious disruption to the armed forces, every skilled agricultural worker who can be of more service in winning the war on the farm than in the Army.

Third. We must encourage the States through every available facility, such as the agriculture colleges and other schools and through local citizens' committees and through the chambers of commerce and civic clubs in the smaller communities, to recruit every available worker, whether he be a schoolboy or senior citizen, bank clerk, lawyer, merchant, or preacher; either for full time or part time for seasonable planting and for seasonable harvesting. All of this, of course, to be without compulsion and strictly on a voluntary basis.

I know that this system was of great aid and assistance to many farmers in World War No. 1, and it can be again.

Fourth. That the O. P. A. and the W. P. B. see to it that priorities are so adjusted that a greater amount of necessary equipment and machinery gets to the farmers without further delay. Let the local dealers and merchants have this machinery on the ground at the places where it is needed and the local war boards pass upon the priorities and necessity for the machinery. In every community they know the farmers, what they need, and who will do the job if furnished the tools and equipment.

In the name of high heaven, let us get away from so much of this Washington and regional stuff. If these congressional lame ducks must have high-salaried jobs in the O. P. A. and in other places, please let us not saddle agriculture with them in this emergency.

Fifth. During the emergency at least let us take all restrictions off of production. I am not adverse, of course, to the program of providing for a minimum of the so-called war crops; provided a common-sense course is pursued in the allocation of the same, taking into consideration and as a primary consideration, the adaptability of the crop to be grown and the particular community where it is requested that it be grown.

In other words, let us not try to raise rice on the high plains of North Dakota, or try to raise pinto beans in the rice swamps of Arkansas.

And, finally, let us give to the farmer a fair parity price at the market place for what he produces.

The world will never forget how the American farmer came to its rescue during the closing years of the last World War. Food was the crying demand, and the farmer produced it. With less help and equipment he increased his production and answered every call of a hungry world. He did not strike and refuse to plant or harvest. He did not hoard his products and say, you must pay me unreasonable prices or I refuse to sell. He answered the appeal of patriotism and he will do so again; but he is entitled to fair treatment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Clarence B. Kelland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AMERICA'S POSITION IN POST-WAR AVIATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, there is before this House a resolution looking toward the creation of a permanent standing committee on civil and commercial aviation, domestic and overseas. To my surprise there has been expressed opposition to this resolution, both on the floor and in committees and in private conferences.

There has been expressed the fear that the formation of the proposed committee on aviation problems would take something away from the present Committee on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, or Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This is true to a certain extent, but it would be to a very limited extent, since the problems which the proposed new committee would consider are, and would continue to be, largely new problems. Indeed, the necessities of modern warfare are pushing air transport along so fast that merely to keep up with aviation today is a full-time job. Most of that province which would be covered by the proposed committee would be in territory which existing committees have never yet explored or even contemplated. And it is my observation that each of the existing committees concerned already has plenty to do.

Certainly the proposed permanent standing committee on civil and commercial aviation would not find itself in conflict with existing committees. The spheres of influence of many committees of this House touch and overlap of necessity, but each has as its basic concern the well-being of the people of these United States. This aim does not dictate that all matters should be placed in the hands of a single committee. It rather suggests committees which can specialize on certain lines, and a logical synchronization of all of their efforts. And in all the fields of human endeavor which require specialization today, aviation is the most exacting.

The proposed new committee would have to consider and formulate new policies for controlling the new situations which are developing in this transition period. Beyond a few generalizations on post-war policy we should not go in this period of flux. This House needs a committee of air-wise Members who can keep their legislative feet on the ground, no matter how much they or others fly in the stratosphere—men who shall be prepared to advise this body in this highly technical field when this global war has been won, and in the light of conditions as they shall then exist.

Certainly the principle of the freedom of the air must be a basic general premise for the post-war world. The gentlewoman from Connecticut in her most eloquent maiden speech before this House recently seemed to advocate a sort of an American freedom of the world's air, which would be comparable to the old British freedom of the seas when Britannia ruled the waves. In that same speech she spoke confidently of American defeat in the next war if this nation espoused the wrong air policy.

Now, I insist that there is a probability we might prevent future wars from ever plaguing the world, by a proper American air policy. The executive branch of our Government now has an interdepartmental Post War International Air Policy Committee, headed by Assistant Secretaries of State, War, Navy, Commerce, and others. Certainly this House should have a committee capable by authority and membership to study continuously and report when needed on this all-important subject.

We abhor glib phrases in this generation. Our young men are not inspired to fight to "Make the world safe for democracy," and so on. But I really believe that the basic reason why this country is involved in this war is the belief that this can be made the war to end all wars on this earth. And this great desire can be brought to pass through two factors; first, that all other nations and peoples shall see and recognize our capacity to throw an overwhelming air might to any part of the globe at any time; and, second, that our nation, which destiny has elevated to the greatest position of power ever held by any nation on earth, shall make all other nations and peoples know and realize that we covet nothing which is theirs—and will even help them to hold that which is theirs against any aggressor.

The achievement of our war aim to bring permanent peace to the world requires the will to have that peace, and the power effectively to demand it—both depending upon the universal realization that the will and the power are genuine.

American aviators, military and civilian, are now known pretty much all over the world. They are a very high type of our young manhood. We are fortunate to have them so widely dispersed as unofficial but very effective ambassadors of good will all along our far-flung air lines. On my flight to Europe I saw their work at first hand at Belem and Natal in our sister Republic of Brazil, in Trinidad, in Lisbon, Bermuda, and the Azores. These are only a few of their locations, of course, but I noted the confidence and fellowship with which the officials and natives of these places approached our flying men and ground crews and other personnel. It was evident that here was being engendered that confidence and friendship which are the guaranties of peace to come. Here was the fruit of the blending of good will with the evidence of power.

All along these constantly expanding aerial routes American boys are fraternizing with the people of the great cities and with the natives of jungles and desert. Our men have no background motive of imperialism—no secret belief in themselves as a superior race—and their friendly approach is recognized as sincere. Our airmen, ground crews, sanitation corps, are working and playing with the people they meet from the sophisticated night clubs of Rio to the landing fields hewn from the jungle or the steel apron laid down beside an isolated desert oasis. Our contractors actually pay the natives for their work; they can buy standard goods and are not cheated at our stores; our doctors treat their ailing and their injured; our men are teaching them to play our outdoor games and the principles of fair play and American sportsmanship. This is a new kind of conquest—the conquest of peace and fellowship, and the people are at first skeptical, and then responsive.

The peoples of a large part of the world are becoming aware of the power which is America. They see or they hear about the B–17E Boeing Flying Fortresses, the B–24 Consolidated Liberators, the B–25 North American Mitchells, the B–26 Martin Marauders which roar along the lanes toward what will obviously be highly destructive conduct. They also note the split tail P–38 Lockheed Lightnings, the flying cannon platform P–39 Bell Airacobras, the rejuvenated P–40 Curtiss Warhawks, and many other types of bombers, fighters, interceptors, reconnaissance, cargo, transport, and passenger planes as they hurry along toward the fronts in a steady stream. And the word that all that power has not come for exploitation but instead is come to enforce the policy of live and let live, is working a new spirit into the peoples of this earth. The word of hope is spreading outward from each of the American airports like the ripples on the surface of a lake when an unaccustomed impulse breaks its surface. This is the new diplomacy. Our airmen are preparing the way for permanent peace on this earth.

Many bases for our aviation forces have been developed outside of our continental limits. Steps should be taken at once to make all bases which figure in our hemispheric influence permanent acquisitions. As for the other great air bases which we have developed, or shall have developed in Europe, Africa, Asia, or on the islands of the seas, the treaties which solidify the world peace after this war will have to deal. They will be available to all nations for legitimate commercial purposes. We will approach the peace conferences with an attitude of fairness to all concerned, but with the determination to end future wars.

These conferences will have to consider and determine just what freedom of the air is to include. The principle of the freedom of the sea, with which we have had some experience, will give some hints as to how not to proceed. But there is a vast difference between the low-value quantitative transport of iron ore, cement, raw wool, and such cargo in surface ships which travel 200 miles in a day, and the carrying of refined cargo at 200 miles an hour. Rules worked out for visits of slow-moving transports to points on the periphery of a country are not applicable to an air transport which could hop from New York to Detroit and return while a surface ship was coming into dock from Sandy Hook.

Few nations will desire to seal the air over their territory from all other peoples. But, just as surely, the so-called right of innocent passage cannot be construed to permit the possibility of reconnaissance or aerial photography over strategic areas. No; there will have to be air lanes from which foreign planes shall not deviate, and stated airports which they may utilize. The extent of their passenger and cargo carrying activity will likely have to be settled by reciprocal agreements. The many legislative angles of such questions require the existence of the permanent standing committee proposed by the resolution before this House. These matters are too important and too specialized to be dumped into the lap of just any committee.

I am often impelled to think of the development of the great West by the coming of transport facilities into that region, as comparable to the world transformation which the new cargo carrying airplanes will bring upon the conclusion of this war. And a new development is coming to the West through the expanded civilian uses of aviation, as soon as we can return to peaceful pursuits. This is of particular interest to my great State because of the distances and elevations with which we are blessed. We have at Lowry Field and at Buckley Field a very large number of aviators of all categories who are training at one of the most modern airports in the world, and favored by almost continuous flying weather. I am told that Denver offers the greatest number of sunshine hours per year of any airport in this country, and, moreover, that pilots who receive their training in that clear, pure, mile-high air, are acknowledged to be superior flyers.

Fort Logan is a center of training for our airmen, and our State institutions are turning out finished pilots, observers, gunners, bombardiers, navigators, and ground crew men in great numbers. As an indication of Colorado's leadership in this field—at the recent preflight institute held under the auspices of the Aviation Committee of the Denver Chamber of Commerce and the C. A. A., leading speakers were Prof. Ben Wood, nationally known pioneer in aviation education, of Colorado University, and Dr. George Frazer, president of Colorado State College of Education.

This country has taken the lead throughout the development of aviation. Our industry is now geared to a fast-moving program of airplane production which will have tremendous momentum on the day that the unconditional surrender of our enemies is signed. Some part of that industry will revert immediately and naturally to the production of automobiles, and other items and machinery of peaceful pursuits, but another large part will continue to serve the new demand for airplanes—cargo in many specialized fields and passenger planes of all categories.

All along these new air lanes, and in all of the restored countries, there will be a critical need for transport. The United States Air Transport Command or some logical successor will continue to deliver along all of these long air lanes, carrying vitally needed foods and medicines, farm machinery, and seed instead of aviation gasoline, bombs, guns, and tanks. I do not see that the coming of peace will bring any diminution of the usefulness of these planes, air lanes, or bases. Quite the contrary will surely be the case.

As always before, when we have sent occupational troops into any country, a certain number will return when their service is terminated. All along these war-born routes, American boys who have soldiered out there will return, bringing wives and friends, and establish themselves as residents. They will branch out in all directions from the established air lanes and go into various vocations. And these peaceful settlers will be, just as they were in the service, unofficial American ambassadors of good will and trade and development, continuing their great work for our country and for the peace of the world.

One of the most important lanes, and perhaps the longest being currently flown by the United States Air Transport Command, is the one out to Chungking. It replaced the Burma Road when that supposedly indispensable trade route was cut off. Without the vital war necessities flown to China's armies, the Japanese could not have been held in China. The air transport alone kept Japan from complete ownership of the sky over China. A blessing on that air route and on all of the pilots and crews who flew and are still flying its hazardous mountain course. And they were inspired to their continued effort by the legendary accomplishments of Claire Chennault's Flying Tigers, and their successors in the American Air Corps out there.

It is my hope that our country can double and redouble that transport to China, and bring that heroic people increased and more direct assistance. We have trained a few Chinese pilots in this country. This program should be speeded up, and also the training of all categories of airmen in China itself should be encouraged and aided by American instructors and equipment. For with a China strong in the air, and continuing our traditional friendship and mutual aid, there would be no further Japanese menace. We should do everything possible to attain this goal. In a peacetime assured by this alliance in mutual friendliness and advantage we would continue to supply China with her aviation materials and many other goods. China is a natural and an immense market and a good friend and neighbor for the nation which does not seek to exploit her.

In our own hemisphere there are other friendly nations whose air future we should be working assiduously to assure. With Mexico we are already in partnership. Brazil is our natural ally in all pursuits in that we complement each other's products. The vast expanses and great difficulties of surface transport in that great country invoke of necessity the airplane. The Brazilians have demonstrated that they make good pilots. It is our role to supply them with airplanes and with precision mechanical articles which are properly transported by airplanes both during and following the conflict. The efficiency of the Brazilian air arm and bases is of vital interest to North America as well as South America. The transport of raw rubber and chicle from the Amazon jungles is now an established business of air transport. It results that many of the interior natives are familiar with large transport airplanes, but have never seen an automobile or a streetcar.

Something in the way of a statement from the legislative body of this Government concerning the principle of freedom of the air is needed today in order to dissipate the uneasiness which exists in other nations, Britain for example, as evidenced in recent House of Commons debate and some newspaper comments concerning the great advances along the new air lanes made by the United States Air Transport Command. The London Times of December 29, last, closed an article on this subject by stating that it is reported that American assurance has been given that America would not attempt to exploit her advantage by nailing down concessions over the world air routes.

Now, I do not know any agency of our Government which is competent to give any such post-war assurance. If such assurances have been given to any nation, certainly this House has not been consulted, and legislation concerning post-war air transport is definitely the concern of this body.

This is just one more reason why I rise to advocate favorable consideration upon the resolution before the House to create a permanent standing committee on civil and commercial aviation, domestic and overseas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] is recognized for 15 minutes.

PROMOTING HEMISPHERICAL SOLIDARITY THROUGH EDUCATION

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to direct the attention of the House for a few minutes to the post-war world. We have heard considerable discussion this afternoon about the post-war world from the standpoint of aviation, from the standpoint of military problems, and from other standpoints, but I want to say just a few words about the post-war world from the standpoint of improved international relations and that fundamental goal which we all have in this war of developing a program which will lead to permanent peace throughout the world.

I hesitate naturally to suggest anything now about an appropriation at a time when we are operating with a hundred billion dollar budget, and I would make no such suggestions, but I feel that perhaps this small appropriation which I am about to propose may serve as insurance to protect the dividends we hope to secure from the expenditure of these hundreds of billions of dollars which we are forced to spend in the prosecution of this war.

I do not begrudge and I am sure no Member of the House begrudges the expenditure of anything and everything that it takes to bring victory to our side in this terrible conflict, and I hope by the same token that no right-minded man or woman objects to the expenditure of reasonable sums of money to protect the dividends which will come to the world as a result of this war if out of it comes a permanent peace for all mankind.

I have introduced a bill in the House today known as H. R. 2034, which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The purpose of this bill is to promote further the friendly relations of the peoples of the Pan-American republics by providing for Pan-American student-teacher scholarships of $1,000 each throughout the country; scholarships which our student teachers can use in studying in teachers' colleges in our South American republics, and to provide 1,000 scholarships of $1,000 each for students in the other American republics to use in studying in teachers' colleges of the United States. Inasmuch as the bill is very short I ask permission, Mr. Speaker, to incorporate at this point the text of H. R. 2034 as a part of these remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

H. R. 2034

A bill to promote further the friendly relations of the peoples of the Pan American Republics by providing for Pan American student teacher scholarships

Whereas the good neighbor policy of the United States was adopted to promote solidarity among the Republics represented in the Pan American Union; and

Whereas familiarity with peoples of other republics and their customs tends to promote the understanding which is necessary to the success of the good neighbor policy; and

Whereas well-trained and carefully selected instructors in the elementary and high schools who understand the peoples and customs of other Republics furnish the best means by which to transmit knowledge and understanding to the greatest number of people: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for each of the four following fiscal years, the sum of $2,000,000. Such sum shall be used each year for the payment of the expenses of 1,000 students from the United States in attending teachers' colleges in the other Republics which are represented in the Pan American Union and the expenses of 1,000 students from such Republics in attending teachers' colleges in the United States.

SEC. 2. The Pan American Union acting with the advice and counsel of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs is authorized to provide for the selection each year of 1,000 students from the United States for attendance at colleges in the other republics which are represented in the Pan American Union, subject to the following conditions:

(a) Candidates for scholarships shall be selected from students who are finishing their freshman year and are enrolled in State-supported teachers colleges which are members of the American Association of Teachers Colleges.

(b) Scholarships shall be awarded to two students residing in each congressional district. All other scholarships shall be scholarships-at-large.

(c) The awarding of scholarships-at-large shall be on such a basis as will insure Nation-wide distribution of such scholarships.

(d) The selection of candidates for scholarships from congressional districts shall be supervised by the State office of education of the State in which the district is located. Insofar as practicable such candidates shall be selected from teachers' colleges in each State in proportion to the enrollment in each college.

(e) The selection of candidates-at-large for scholarships shall be supervised by the United States Office of Education.

(f) Candidates for scholarships shall be required to take physical and aptitude examinations.

(g) Each scholarship shall be for the payment of the expenses of attendance in the junior year of college, or the equivalent thereof, at a college selected by the Pan American Union to participate in the exchange of students under this act.

Sec. 3. The Pan American Union is authorized to provide for the selection each year of 1,000 students from republics which are represented in the Pan American Union for attendance at colleges in the United States, subject to the following conditions—

(a) The selection of candidates for scholarships from each republic shall be supervised by the Minister of Education of such republic.

(b) The number of candidates to be selected from each republic shall be determined on the basis of population.

(c) Candidates for scholarships shall be selected from colleges which have as their primary function the training of teachers for elementary and secondary schools.

(d) Candidates for scholarships shall be required to take physical and aptitude examinations.

(e) Each scholarship shall be for the payment of the expenses of attendance in the junior year at a State-supported teachers college which is a member of the American Association of Teachers Colleges. Insofar as possible, the distribution of visiting students to the teachers colleges of the United States shall be made on the same basis as the selection of students from the United States to attend the teachers colleges of the other republics in the Pan American Union.

SEC. 4. No college shall participate in the exchange of any students under this act unless it—

(a) provided that credits earned by any of its students for instruction received at another college under a scholarship awarded under this act shall be counted toward graduation at full face value;

(b) provides for the making of periodic reports to the Pan American Union, the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and to the Institute of International Education; and

(c) assumes responsibility for the welfare and progress of students assigned to it under this act.

SEC. 5. The scholarship of any student may be revoked by the Pan American Union after notice upon determination by it that the student has failed to maintain a satisfactory scholarship record.

BILL PROVIDES EDUCATIONAL PLAN FOR HEMISPHERIC SOLIDARITY

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—Calling upon his colleagues "to spend at least a tiny fraction of a penny for the promotion of peace every time we spend a dollar or more for the prosecution of war," Congressman KARL E. MUNDT, Republican, South Dakota, today introduced legislation authorizing the appropriation of $2,000,000 annually to provide scholarships for exchange students between State teachers' colleges of the United States and those of other American republics. MUNDT'S bill provides for a thousand student teachers to be transferred each way each school year, with $1,000 allotted to each student. Every congressional district in America would participate in the program.

Mr. MUNDT advised the House that in the preparation of this legislation he had conferred with Nelson Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and with a committee of faculty members from Indiana State Teachers College at Terre Haute, Ind., who had been making a special study of inter-American relations in the field of education. MUNDT said that Mr. Rockefeller was enthusiastic in his response to the suggestion and expressed the belief that the proposed program would be welcomed in all the American republics.

In limiting these scholarships to students in the teachers' colleges of the republics cooperating in the Pan American Union, MUNDT declared, "The ideal manner in which to improve and preserve friendly relations among neighbor nations is to promote an understanding and appreciation of the cultural background, the political systems, and the economic problems of sovereign states. By giving student teachers of the United States an opportunity to live and study for a year in other American republics we train missionaries of good will in the educational field who will in turn transmit this enlightened understanding to the students with whom they come in contact in the classroom. The same dividends will accrue for the student teachers of the other American republics who spend a year in study and association with students and educators scattered throughout the teachers' colleges of the United States. It is nothing more than prudent peace insurance for the post-war world to begin, now, devising methods for a better mutual understanding among the peoples of the world. Here in the Americas, from Alaska to Argentina, let us demonstrate the process now of promoting peaceful cooperation through learning to respect one another by coming to know one another more understandingly."

Mr. MUNDT. A reading of this bill will indicate I am sure some of the benefits to accrue and will clearly point out the method of operation incorporated in the bill. The purpose of the legislation is to make these scholarships available only to students in teachers' colleges for this reason, that after they graduate and become teachers and go into communities their influence can be radiated out much more widely and rapidly than students in any other branch of learning. Students from South America will live in this country and our students will live in the countries of South America for a year, many times in private homes. When they come back to this country to assume their profession of teaching they will come in contact with both parents and students and be in a very intimate position to spread a better understanding and appreciation of the customs and cultural background and political systems and economic problems of our sister republics in this hemisphere. The same is true for the visiting students who will come to the United States from the other American republics.

I hope that this legislation which I have suggested may receive early consideration by the House Foreign Affairs Committee for the reason that very soon there will be called on this hemisphere an inter-American meeting of the ministers of education of all the 21 republics. These ministers of education are meeting in an effort to implement through the device of education a better understanding among the various peoples of these republics. I feel that some such system of exchange of teachers as I propose would be something which will win the hearty approval of the meeting of these ministers of education. I hope those who approve of this program will let my colleagues on the House Foreign Affairs Committee know of your support.

Mr. Speaker, I have consulted at some length with Nelson Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and his staff on this problem. He has gone over this legislation with me and it has his hearty support and approval.

I have been in conference with a faculty committee of the Indiana State Teachers College at Terre Haute, Ind., some of the members of which I have known for some time in a professional capacity, and I presume that is the reason they have contacted me on the problem. The Indiana State Teachers College has a faculty committee called the war emergency planning committee, which has worked in conjunction with Nelson Rockefeller and myself in proposing various details of H. R. 2034, and I may add that the gentleman from Terre Haute, Mr. NOBLE JOHNSON, has also been of inestimable value in his contributions and suggestions in trying to establish this type of legislation for encouraging good will through these scholarships.

The members of this faculty committee at the Indiana State Teachers College are as follows: J. F. Mackell, chairman; V. E. Breidenbaugh, D. W. Morris, M. O. Peters, F. M. Curtis, S. A. Yager, R. F. McDaid, and J. F. Sembower.

These Indiana educators have done a splendid job in thinking through some of the problems involved in this legislation. We have a number of commercial scholarships available to Americans to study in South American schools and available to South American students to study in the schools of the United States, but my proposal is the only type of scholarship which is specifically set up for students who are going to become teachers in the American republics and who consequently will carry the missionary work of public understanding, good feeling and good friendship out to the youth who are developing ideals of citizenship as they come up through the school systems of all these republics.

It is well known that such magazines as Time magazine and the Reader's Digest are now publishing issues in Spanish or Portuguese, so that the South Americans may learn from a reading of American magazines in their native language a little more about our attitudes, our ideals, and customs in this country. This is a splendid service. The more we can do to understand each other in this hemisphere, it seems to me, the better we are prepared to cement and to further the good friendship and good feeling existing among the various American republics.

The orientals have an old saying to the effect that, "the man you do not like is the man you do not know." I think there is a great element of human experience and truth in that axiom, and the better we can come to know the people of this hemisphere and the people throughout the world, the better we are going to like and understand them and the better we come to knowing them the more probable it is that the program which will develop after the war, whatever it is, for the preservation of peace, will have an opportunity to succeed.

The ideal manner in which to improve and preserve friendly relations among neighbor nations is to promote an understanding and appreciation of the cultural background, the political systems, and the economic problems of sovereign states. By giving student teachers of the United States an opportunity to live and study for a year in other American republics we train missionaries of good will in the educational field who will in turn transmit this enlightened understanding to the students with whom they come in contact in the classroom. The same dividends will accrue for the student teachers of the other American republics who spend a year in study and association with students and educators scattered throughout the teachers' colleges of the United States. It is nothing more than prudent peace insurance for the post-war world to begin, now, devising methods for a better mutual understanding among the peoples of the world. Here in the Americas, from Alaska to Argentina, let us demonstrate the process now of promoting peaceful cooperation through learning to respect one another by coming to know one another more understandingly.

Now, as to the cost of this program. My bill calls for the appropriation or the authorization of an appropriation of $2,000,000 a year to provide these 2,000 scholarships in the amount of $1,000 each, one-half of which will be for students of the United States and one-half of which will be for students in the other American republics, working through the Pan American Union.

This will amount to an expenditure of about $1 for the promotion of peace and for the preservation of better human relationship for every $50,000 we are now spending for the prosecution of this war. That $50,000, of course, and hundreds of billions more must be spent, but it seems to me it is equally important that we spend this little $1 in order to make sure that out of the war will come something of genuine benefit to all mankind.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when this Congress should give some attention to developing programs and processes whereby perhaps we can spend at least a tiny fraction of a penny for the promotion of peace and good will every time we spend a dollar or more for the prosecution of the war. To that end, as you know, I have also introduced House Joint Resolution 28 to establish a Post-War Planning Commission. We must spend what it takes to win the war and I think good judgment indicates we must also spend what we can to protect and develop benefits from the war which will prevent some future historian from writing of this conflict that once again a tremendous burden of human sacrifice shall have been made in vain.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, "we're over the hill to the poorhouse."

I take the floor not to bring to your attention a new fact, a new circumstance for your consideration, but to remind you and remind you again that the farm-labor shortage is serious and must be solved now. Crops that are not planted cannot be harvested. You reap what you sow—sow nothing, reap nothing.

If something is not done now, we shall be so far gone over the cliff of food shortage in a few days that we can never recover the ground lost. I do not believe that with millions of men without factories and men without farms in foreign countries that we should overexpand our military forces at the expense of the bread baskets of all our allies. Food will win the war. Do we want soldiers—even hungry ones and half-equipped, half-clothed ones? The rest of the world boasts about their manpower and about how many men they can put under arms. All right; if they have men, we have the machinery and the skilled labor to feed and equip all the armies our allies can marshal, provided we use our heads.

If the bureaucratic parasites who have fed so long on the people are not smart enough to keep their hosts alive, we must take the bull by the horns lest we all go down to defeat. If the paper planners at mahogany desks cannot understand the dirt and weather problems of the farmer, and we do not inform them, we may all go hungry; and while most of the farmers I know cannot afford to lose many pounds, there are thousands of bay windows in Washington that will look better for a little controlled diet, and, believe you me, they will get it.

I have a letter this morning from one of the biggest packers in the country, who tells me that he has been asked by the Government to pack 33 percent more food this year to help win the war. But when he went out to contract the acreage for raising this food he met a frightening situation. He has been unable to match his contracts of last year by almost 50 percent. He is offering from 25 percent to 75 percent more to the farmers if they will produce the fruit and vegetables for him to can, but they are forced to refuse his offers because in most cases there is only Ma and Pa and maybe Uncle John, who was injured in the last war, to do the work. Last year there was Ma, Pa, Uncle John, and three strapping farm boys to do it. If the youngsters have not been drafted, they are in the city working in a defense plant for a lot more than a farmer ever made and on a 48-hour week, too. Which leaves Ma and Pa and Uncle John, who have always worked 70 to 80 hours per week, and therefore are unable to absorb the extra load. Farm-machinery shortages cannot solve the problem, either, but only complicate it.

Gentlemen, I have never held myself up as a universal authority and I know that there are a lot of the tactical problems of the War Department that I do not understand, as well as a lot of the political ambitions which prompt some of our highest leaders, but I am a farmer and I have been eating three square meals a day for years, and so long as two and two make four we have to raise food before we can eat it.

It is a matter of statistics that most of our cities have grown enormously in the last 6 months and where can new city dwellers come from but from the country. We are drafting about 10 percent of our manpower, which should reduce the city populations 10 percent and the rural population about 10 percent; but such has not been the case. While the farms are literally robbed of men, the cities have absorbed their 10-percent loss to the armed services and have grown by thousands. From where can such increases come except from back of a plow, or out of a hay mow? If you are not worried and if you have not some suggestions to offer, you are not fulfilling your responsibilities to America. America needs food and food will not just grow. It has to be planted in earth that is prepared for it and at the right time. It has to be plowed and cared for and watched until God and Nature have done their work. It has to be harvested and stored against the time of need. This is hard work and it cannot be done by a pencil-pushing political appointee. We can push pencils and keep records after Hirohito has joined his none too honorable ancestors and after Schickelgruber is papering the walls of Hell. We will need the work then, but why cannot we pare our bureaus to the last drawer now and get in crops in order that we may eat.

There are still the blind ones among us who are yapping about social gains and esthetic progress and the spreading of some kind or another of glad tidings over the world. They will look mighty queer next winter when their ration books are just memories or are being used in the bottoms of their old shoes to keep out the snow. How can a bunch of men who claim to be smart be so dumb? Did no one read the story of the ant and the grasshopper in his second-grade reader? Has everyone forgotten the old hymn Work for the Night Is Coming? Has not anyone told Washington that we are at war and men are dying?

Take the case of the packer in Indiana who is getting less than 50 percent of the food planted on the farms this year that he got planted last year. How is he going to pack 33 percent more, as the Government asks? How far will a 50 percent crop stretch? Also, what will happen if we should have a bad season? Gentlemen, we need to overplant and do not kid yourselves one bit. That is not taking food off your table this minute, or the next meal, but come Christmas 1943 and we will know what effect half of last year's crop of pumpkins will mean. It will mean that the boys in service will get all there is, and will need more than there is; not to mention our Allies and their needs, which will leave you, and John Q. Public and Mr. Taxpayer absolutely a round zero, and you cannot live long on that.

They took our nylon, but stockings can be made of rayon or cotton. They stopped us driving our cars, but we can get there on the streetcars, or stay home with a good book. If they need the shirts off our backs to win the war we will just button our coats a little tighter, but so far as I know people have had to have food since long before Nero, and yet we sit here fiddling while time burns.

There is an old motto often used on Victorian sundials which should remind us of the dangers of delay. It goes like this, "It is later than you think." Gentlemen, you will be emptier than you think and so will I and so will those boys in north Africa and Iceland and the Solomons if we do not get busy.

The Lord will do more than his share; he will grow it if we will plant the seed and harvest the crop, but He will never plant the seed or harvest and store the crop for us. Who will do it this year? The Lord only knows.

CONTESTED ELECTION, SEVENTH DISTRICT, ILLINOIS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

FEBRUARY 27, 1943.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: That there is now in progress, under the provisions of the Federal Statutes, a contest for the seat in the House of Representatives from the Seventh Congressional District of the State of Illinois is indicated by a petition which has this day been filed with the Clerk signed by James C. Moreland, contestant, wherein he prays that the time allowed for taking testimony in the beforementioned case be extended beyond the time permitted by law and setting forth the ground upon which the request is made.

Since this authority can only be granted by action of the House itself, the petition and accompanying exhibits are transmitted herewith for consideration by the appropriate committee.

Very truly yours,
SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TOWE (at the request of Mr. CANFIELD), on account of illness.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 7. Concurrent resolution requesting that an appropriate medal be designed for presentation to the President in connection with his recent trip to Africa; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 2, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.
